Traffic Ordinance To Be Enforced

"Make them keep to the right, be they pedestrians or drivers," is the order that has gone forth from police headquarters. Sergeants Youngblood and Pitts have recently received instructions from Chief Christenbury to enforce the law to the limit and they in turn have told all of the patrolmen.

At the Square today the officer on duty was about the busiest one on the force. Constantly were wagons driving to the left, or automobiles taking the improper angle at the corners. Warnings were given, and if these warnings are not sufficient arrests will be made. Summonses may be expected to be served at the door of many a home within the next few days.

Since the adoption of the traffic ordinance which compels all vehicles to go to the right, and, as well, suggests that pedestrians do the same on the sidewalks, there has been but little effort to enforce its provisions.

Recently there was an appeal made to municipal officials to provide more thoroughly for the enforcement of the city law, and the order from the chief of police is the result. No patrolman is unacquainted now with the ordinance, a copy of which is attached to the order to the sergeants to keep their eyes and ears open for violators.

Best Year of All Says Pres. Baldwin

Closing Exercises of The Southern Industrial Institute—The Play a Great Success—Year's Work Gone Over.

The commencement exercises of the Southern Industrial Institute closed last night with the presentation of "The Colonel's Maid" to a house that was crowded to its utmost capacity. In fact as many as a hundred were turned away because of lack of room. These were all the more disappointed at not being able to see the play after they heard the comments of their more fortunate friends who had come early enough to get admittance. To say that the audience was well pleased with the play is putting it mildly. For judging from their applause during the play and comments after one would think that they had rarely spent a more enjoyable evening. In fact so delighted were the audience that at the close there were numerous demands that the play be repeated at the Academy of Music. Last commencement "Cricket on the Hearth" was given and though it was very much enjoyed still it didn't begin to appeal to the audience as did "The Colonel's Maid."

"The Colonel's Maid" is an old Southern romance replete with interesting situations and humor. The plot centers around the long standing rivalry between Col. Robert Rudd, of North Carolina, and Col. Richard Byrd, of South Carolina caused by a duel fought twenty-eight years before their love affairs. For three or four years both Byrd and Rudd loved Marjorie Byrd, the daughter of his father's enemy. And to complicate things all the more the colonel has picked out another girl for his son to marry. And both being men of their own mind very strenuous times follow. The play is the carrying out of the scheme of young Rudd to gain his father's consent to the marriage, a scheme as bold as it is exciting. But so well does he manage it, that he not only gets his father's consent but the girl he loves, by the way, the enmity between the two colonels is broken and two other romances almost as interesting as his own is consummated.

Clyde Smith, as Col. Rudd, had the leading part and played it with the reality of a trained artist. Mrs. John Carroll, the sister-in-law to the colonel, was an equal match for him, as she was a "woman of her own mind" and it was extremely interesting to see which of the two would get the better of the other in their arguments. This part was taken by Miss Josephine Leach, who won the constant applause of the audience by her interpretation of this aristocratic lady. Miss Fannie Louise Pierce, as Marjorie Byrd, won not only the affection of Bob and his father, but also of the audience, so intimately did she play her part. The part of her suitor, Bob Rudd, was taken by Mr. Minor Gales. And as a typical college man with his "swagger" and "nerve" he was very popular with all. But if there was a favorite character with the audience it was Cing-ah-Ling, the Chinese cook of Col. Rudd's establishment. He was irresistible in his interpretation of this difficult part. And in his costume and cue he made one feel as if he were a genuine "Celestial" taken from one of the Chinese restaurants in Chinatown. His entrance upon the stage was always a signal for keener attention and necessary outbreak of laughter. The other characters, though minor ones, gave the audience an idea of the splendid way they could take a "leading part" in future plays.

Between the acts the audience was delighted with two drills by the young ladies dressed in white. Both were wonderfully artistic.

Best Year of Institute. President Baldwin took this opportunity of making announcements regarding the year just closing and the prospects for the supplementary term of two months and a half to begin April 4th. He said in part: "We are just closing decidedly the best year in our history. We have had the largest number of students, and not only that but we have never had a set who were more earnest or diligent in their work. We have had an enrollment of 103 boarding pupils and 250 day pupils. For three or four years we have had some students working half-time, but not until this year have we given the experiment a thorough trial. They are now in school, and we have had about thirty working a week and going to school a week. Some of these work on the farm, and the management of the Hoskins Miss, which is near by, permitted us to work some there, and the young ladies do house work. One group work one week while the other is in school, the next week they exchange places. The experiment has been the most interesting one I have ever made. I have taught these classes myself and have enjoyed the work very much. The results have been most gratifying, and I am convinced that no better way has been found for helping working boys and girls. The student workers themselves have been very much pleased, so far as I know without a single exception. They have been faithful at their manual tasks and they have studied faithfully. They have been self-reliant and cheerful. I believe that there are untold possibilities in this scheme for the industrial workers of the South. Our special term of 2 1/2 months will open on April 4th. The methods in this term will be different from those of the regular term. Students will not take so many studies, but will give all their time and attention to two or three, which will thus enable them to secure a knowledge of these subjects in a short time that would ordinarily require a much longer period. Particular attention will be given to young men from cotton mills who desire a better knowledge of arithmetic and textile calculations, and to public school teachers who have not had the advantages of a college training. There will also be this year a course for welfare workers. It is expected that this will become one of the most important departments of the school. Nearly half of the regular boarding pupils will remain, and other new ones will come in to take the places of those who have to go out to work. An interesting feature of this special term which was begun last year is the children's gardens. These have been found to be valuable not only for the knowledge that the children have gotten with regard to agriculture and horticulture, but also for the fact that their gardens furnish them subjects for composition work and arithmetic. In our ordinary school work we have found that one of the most seriously neglected studies is one that really is the most important, reading. We have done some particularly fine work in reading in the lower classes and it is our purpose to extend this work throughout the whole school. When one has learned to get thought quickly and accurately from the printed page he has gone a long way towards securing an education. As officers and teachers of the school we have been particularly pleased this year by the many kindnesses shown us in the city and it is our purpose to endeavor to make next year a more valuable one than any that has yet preceded it."

Mr. J. D. McCall To Be Speaker The committee in charge of the meeting for boys at the Young Men's Christian Association are leaving nothing undone to make the meeting next Sunday evening at 5 o'clock the largest and best of the series. The day is to be observed as "mother's day," and as a large number of mothers have already signified their desire to attend the meeting its success is assured. Mr. J. D. McCall will address the meeting. Mr. McCall has addressed the boys once before this winter, and the simple announcement that he will speak to them again next Sunday will assure a full attendance of the boys. Every boy is urged to bring his mother to this meeting and it is hoped that every mother will respond to the invitation. An especially attractive musical program has been arranged, announcement of which will be made later. Stanley Robison Dead. By Associated Press.
