James Cardinal Gibbons, the eminent prelate who celebrates his golden jubilee in commemoration of his ordination to the Catholic priesthood and the silver jubilee of his cardinalate, in the Fifth Regiment Armory at Baltimore, Md., tomorrow, June 6th.

Cardinal Gibbons Celebrates The Golden Jubilee of His Ordination To the Priesthood

Baltimore, Md., June 5.—At no time in the ecclesiastical history of the United States, has such whole-souled and hearty co-operation, irrespective of sect or creed, been in evidence as that which has made possible the notable gathering of prominent men that will assemble tomorrow afternoon in the Fifth Regiment Armory, to pay homage to America's only Prince of the Church, James Cardinal Gibbons, in commemoration of the golden jubilee of his ordination to the priesthood and the silver jubilee of his cardinalate.

This event stands unique not only because it is the greatest public celebration ever tendered the member of the American clergy, but because of the widespread non-sectarian interest shown and the hearty friendliness and reverence of men whose religious opinions conflict with the faith of His Eminence.

The exercises will take place from four to six tomorrow afternoon, but already the streets of Baltimore give evidence that something unusual is afoot. Men famous in the current history of the United States such as Speaker Champ Clark, ex-Speaker John Cannon and Chief Justice White, of the United States supreme court, are already rubbing elbows with less famous personages in the hotel lobbies while President Taft, ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, and Bishop John Murray, of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Maryland, together with other clerical and political delegations will arrive tomorrow. All Baltimore is in gala attire and all Baltimore together with every liberal-minded man in America wishes His Reverence, the Cardinal well.

No words can give an adequate idea of the reverent respect which Cardinal Gibbons has engendered in the minds not only of his fellow townsmen and among Catholics at large, but throughout the whole United States. In fact, wherever he has come in contact with fellowmen, whether they be devotees of all the varying creeds of Christianity, his broad outlook upon life, urbane manner, and intellectually have instantly won him friends. For years no convention, celebration, or deliberative conference whether secular or religious that has been held in Baltimore or its vicinity has been complete without the presence of his Eminence.

Not only has his innate charm of manner, drawn to him men high up in the affairs of the great American republic, but his kindly philosophy, keen insight into temporal matters, and championship of the proletariat, had gained him the unbounded admiration and love of all classes of society whether they numbered themselves among his flock or stood upon the other side of the religious force.

Unflinching and unflinching application to duty, an unquenchable appetite for work and a brilliancy of intellect far above his fellows, have been the prime characteristics of this remarkable man, who has risen from the lowest order of the Catholic priesthood by leaps and bounds, till today he is at the head of the Universal Church in America and numbers among his flock over 18,000,000 followers. With these huge totals in mind it will readily be seen that His Excellency's position is no sinecure, he must devote a considerable time to the numerous affairs, official and otherwise that claim his attention as head of the Catholic Church in America. He receives invitations from important bodies all over the country; his presence is in demand as arbiter in both great and petty disputes arising among all classes of society; his literary productions are another source of personal effort; and in addition to these drains upon both vitality and time, the Cardinal maintains an extensive social acquaintance that has endeared him to the heart of a community where cradition is placed before wealth, and birth and breeding are held to be the fairest jewels that grace society.

The daily program of this man of 77 affords hints of industry that might well be taken to heart by younger men. He invariably rises at not later than 6 o'clock in the morning and sometimes an hour earlier if work is pressing. Perhaps an hour may be spent in his study before breakfast and after his morning meal he turns to the task of answering his heavy correspondence. The remainder of the forenoon is divided into three periods—one for the celebration of mass, another for the reception of visitors and the third for a short stroll. After luncheon, the cardinal devotes an hour to which he attributes much of the credit for an ability to continue the long day's work with unimpaired vigor. Later there is a further devotion to clerical papers and correspondence, with perhaps the reception of a few visitors of importance, by appointment.

Later in the afternoon the aged prelate goes for another walk of a mile or more, meeting and saluting on the street hundreds of persons who have become familiar with his tall, gaunt figure, light cane and top hat. Walking is the Cardinal's sole indulgence, and the pleasure he takes in this form of exercise carries him far afield and has made him known to every policeman in Baltimore, as well as nine-tenths of the population. The Cardinal almost never receives callers in the morning. His post-prandial hours are devoted to the routine of Church matters or perhaps at rare intervals, with reading in his study. These evenings alone, however, are few and far between, for His Eminence is in constant demand as a guest at public and private dinners, and as speaker at gatherings of various kinds.

The Cardinal's household consists of six young priests, one of whom acts as his private secretary, but it is seldom that one or more visiting priests or churchmen of high rank are not being entertained as guests at the hospitable mansion. The venerable prelate's residence is an imposing structure, severely plain, but interesting as to the outside, and with an inside filled with old and valuable paintings, sculpture and other rare and beautiful art objects. The first floor is given over to four drawing and reception rooms, all opening from a spacious hall and dining room. On the second floor is the Cardinal's suite of private apartments, including study, ante-room, sleeping room and bath, while the remainder of this floor and the entire third floor contain the various apartments of the other members of his household. A number of servants look after the welfare of the Cardinal and his household, the roster including an up-to-date and typically American office boy, an old negro butler of uncertain age, with a profound respect for "de Cardinal."

The meteoric rise of this remarkable man from the humblest estate of boyhood to his present eminent elevation is unequalled in the history of the Church. James Gibbons was born in Baltimore on July 23rd, 1834. In childhood he was taken to Ireland by his parents, where he remained till he was 17. Returning to Baltimore, he determined to devote his life to the priesthood and entered the seminary to prepare for the work. He was ordained at the age of 27 and immediately appointed to a curacy. This place he held for only a few months, when he was placed in charge of a parish on the outskirts of the city of his birth, as rector.

Archbishop Spalding called him to the diocese three years later to become his secretary and chancellor. Twentyfour months afterwards, in 1866, the second plenary council of the American Roman Catholic Church was convened there and the young priest was made assistant chancellor of that august body, representing the hierarchy of the United States.

Two years later, when but 24 years old, he was appointed vicar apostolic of North Carolina with the rank and title of bishop.

In 1872 he was sent to the important see of Richmond, and five years later upon application of the people and of Archbishop Bayley, whose health was failing, he was made bishop co-adjutor in the primary see of Baltimore, with the right of succession. The bishop co-adjutor became archbishop primate in 1877, attaining the highest dignity in the American church at the age of 43, a comparatively young man, and only 16 years after he had entered the priesthood.

The Cardinal has owned an especial fondness for the literature and among his own works are "The Faith of Our Fathers," "The Ambassador of Christ" and "Our Christian Heritage," all of which have been published in several languages.

HIS FULL VALUE REALIZED.

PURCHASE FREEDOM FROM WORRY.
The worry cow might have lived till now.
If she hadn't lost her breath;
But she feared one day she'd not have enough hay
And that worried her to death.

This is not poetry. It is doggerel. Nevertheless the homely lines convey a meaning not to be lost—the priceless value of "freedom from worry."

TROUBLE FOR FATHER.
Robbie ran into the sewing-room and cried:
"Oh, mamma! There's a man in the nursery kissing Fraulein."
Mamma dropped her sewing and rushed for the stairway.
"April fool!" said Robbie gleefully.
"It's only papa."
