Bausewine, the Hero of Yesterday's Game With The Patriots was the real hero of the game here yesterday atternoon when he lifted the ball over the fencing twice, Wolfe was in Fine Style.

A game, conglomerated with every thing in the baseball "Webster," was ushered on the scene yesterday afternoon when the Hornets succeeded in taking the second game of the series from the Pairlots by the score of

Doyle seemed to be particularly anxious for the larger end of the score and mounded three twirlers in his wild efforts to turn the game his direction. Deacon Morrissey was the first visiting heaver to get his'n from the bats of the insects. He elid off to the club house in the third and Hauser essayed to the hill-top to toss a few over. He seemed very nervous and soon succumbed to the buzzin' insects and was chased in the ofth in favor of one dentist, Dr. T. Waliters by handle, who had pitched the day before and won his game. This trip of the boat he was not so lucky and the storm of hits and luck soon showered down on him and his day's work

Bausewine—His Doings.
Through all this changing and shifting there was one brave soldier who withstood the heat and other ingred tents that go to make a twirler uncomfortable when the team is bobbling at rather frequent intervals. This soldier, insect, and gentleman was none other than our own heroic Bauswine. Arriving on the grounds five minutes before play-Morpheus had grabbed him for a longer spell than bargained for - he had but little time to warm up before the fray, but my! how that sucker did warm during the fray! He shot 'em over the pan so fast that it reminds one of the old joke that is synonamous with speed, that it took three people to see 'em pass, the batter-he rarely ever, the catcher-he saw 'em sometimes, and the umps fared better in the pepper line by virtue of the fact that he was further back and out of immedfate danger. Don't know whether you innocent readers gather much from the above but Bauswine was certainly going at some terrific clip. In the eighth inning after the visitors had tied up matters on bobbles by Siegfried, who, by the way, had a miserable day of it, had errored two times in the sixth, fetched two citizens across that rubber by a slasher to right, thereby winning his own game. A good day's work, Bause,

The Crossing of the Pan. As on the previous day the Hornets were the first to cross the rubber. This came about in the second when Wofford smacked the pill to center for the dnitial and was sacrificed down and scored on an infield out. In the third inning the Patriots got busy and pushed four over on a mess of plays. With Carroll tucked Stuart walked and stole second. Rickard also loped and Dovle singled to center, the ball getting away from Weiser and went fo a triple, two registering. Then Fuller, the man strong in the pinches, hit one to left that took to the tall timber for a homer and two more counted, whereupon "Rabbit" Doyle nearly fainted with excitement fetched on by too much happiness. In the last half of the third the insects again got to buzzin' and pushed across a couple more when Bause and Siegfried hit safely. Garman walked, filling the bases. Then the Deacon cut loose a weird heave and Bause came over on the right side. Hauser was imported at this juncture and Weiser hit to second safely and Garman ambled across. In the mean-ple of sacrifices and a hit by Coutts were raced over on him by errors. He By Lightning Change of Pace raced over a couple. In the eighth every Hornet got a swipe at the pill and Masterful Control And a three were pushed over. It was at this pecially stingy to the opposing batstime that Bause got his pinch hit to men with citizens perched. Smith Good Hitting Eye be Man- right with two tucked, and two on that for the Spartans was also there with broke the hopes of Doyle. In the ninth the heaving stuff and was going good

He went into Bench But he Pulled Through second with a pretty face forward slide and then a minute later raced home and tallied on a slick fade-away slide that was beautiful to behold. A stop by McMillan in the ninth of a hit that he converted into an out was clear. Doak was also some racket on that third base, as usual. Doyle hit in flashy style and the drive by Fuller for a circuit was outstanding. Bauswine was going nicely at times but was almost overcome by the heat. In the first two innings of play he fanned four in a
