

Circle 'K' Seeks New Members

Today the Circle K Club will hold a coffee hour in the University Union in order to meet male students interested in joining the organization. Scott MacMillian, President of the club, said that Circle K now has more hard workers than in the past, but that the club is always interested in new members with new ideas.

The purpose of Circle K is to carry on a variety of activities which will be of value to the University and, at the same time, give members an opportunity to develop their leadership abilities. Initiative and responsibility are key words in the organization.

This year, as in the past, Circle K ran a Book Exchange to enable students to buy and sell used books at reduced rates. "Many students consider this to be a money-making project," Scott said. "But the Exchange often represents a financial loss to the club. The average charge for handling each book (maximum—50 cents) is meant to cover the expenses encountered in running the project and there has rarely been a profit."

Last month Circle K took on the job of binding and distributing the long-awaited Student Directories after the administration failed to put them out Fall Semester as promised. Another service project is the weekly publication of the University Newsletter, and before the days of pre-registration, the club operated the "close-out" board for frustrated students.

"We're not all work and no play," Scott added. "We are planning now for the Carolina's District Convention and are looking forward to the International Convention which was in Miami last year. So, we work hard and have a good time, too."
