Cafeteria Cashier's Woes: 'See You Around, Flunkie'

In between the jingle of coins and the cold slap of bills in the cafeteria cash-register comes a steady flow of chatter. Directly over the punch keys, the dialogue is accentuated by a vivacious gurgly sort of laugh. Marilou Garrett is showing her appreciation of someone's blurted-out joke. Nearly always she's ready with a swift come-back.

"Let's see . . . roast beef, cabbage, chocolate milk, tossed salad, sweet potatoes . . . with gravy? . . . son, you've got a powerful digestive system . . . pecan pie . . . you're picking out the nuts? It's still the same price, sir . . . uh, Rice Krispies. Amazing what you can cram on one tray. That'll be . . ."

"Thought I heard you coming. The tread of tiny toes. Sorry about the yellow of the eggs running all over your toast. It makes your breakfast more digestible though, and besides the yolk sorta blends in with that pretty paisley tie, in case it splatters. If you'd rather we have a stack of pabulum under the cash-register for such emergencies.

"No, ma'am. I'm subject to error like any human being, but I think I added up that ice cream sandwich correctly. Yes, it sure is easy to get figures tripped up in your head. I might accidentally reverse the 1 and 0 in the excitement of ringing up a 10 cent item.

"Ah, Mr. Draper. Let me add up that appetizing meal for you." "Short-change me, Miss Garrett, and I chop off part of your test grade. Believe me, you can't afford it."

"Gee, am I glad he smiled when he said that." "Marilou! Can you break bread with me half-past the noon hour?"

"Glad to, if this line will just calm down. It's endless. Groan—my aching arches! What ever happened to that handy little stool I used to sit on and call 'friend.'"

"Do you charge extra for extra napkins? How 'bout if we take the dispenser also?"

"Honestly, we cashiers need a labor union." Clink, zipp, ring!

"Hey watch out for that cream machine. You just push up and let her rip. I laughed 'til I thought I'd die when Mr. O'Conner put old 'Elsie' in. People would push down on that thing; then they'd push back up and nothing would happen. But when they gave up and moved their coffee cup, well there'd just be a huge puddle of cream on the counter."

"Sorry, we can't take diners' club cards."

"How about a Phillips 66 credit card with a Beetle insignia, or my dirt infested, dog-eared Bob Dylan protest card? Oh, you don't go for that . . . what am I offered for one tempting batch of french fries?"

"Yes the stock market did take a dive and your investments were tied up in Delsey Tissue. Still, we cannot honor a dishonorable check or that cobwebby Confederate money."

"Back for refueling? That'll be . . ."

"About 30 cents."

"e7."

"30."

"Mr. Draper, I hope you're not as stingy with your grades as you are with your money."

"See you around, Flunkie."

"Who thumped that Batman sticker on the back of the cash register? It doesn't seem dignified somehow."

After the one o'clock line narrows down to a slow trickle, Marilou charges behind the steam table to pick up a plate of whatever is left after the afternoon cleanout of provisions.

She may get as far as 10 paces or perhaps relax to the extent she can shovel the fork half-way to her pert little mouth. But then again, the possibility of someone else wanting his yummies totaled up far overrides that of Marilou getting nourishment. Between sporadic fork-pushing sessions, her food may become slightly less than room temperature.

However, the vivacious strawberry-haired freshman has a sense of humor to carry her through any frontal attack by ravaged students. Her Hershey bar eyes dance when the occasion warrants it, yet they can flick to dead seriousness when she hears some tragedy or problem of a fellow student. Marilou has got to be a combination "mother-confessor," mediator, stunt girl, comedian, and price adder-upper. Besides her many hours on duty at the cash register, she must also help keep books for the cafeteria, maintain her scholarship, miraculously keep that straight B average, and take active participation in school affairs.

Britton Given Student Party Nomination For President

Scholarship Holders Need To Reapply

"Students who currently hold scholarships, grants, or loans, who will be returning to the University next year, and who need to continue to receive financial assistance, should, if they have not already done so, write to the Dean of Student Affairs requesting a renewal of their award for the 1966-1967 year." These words to affected students comes from Dean Mackay.

Mackay stated that the letter filed by the student to his office should contain a statement that the financial situation previously reported will remain the same through the next year. Any change in the students financial situation should also be reported in the letter.

If the application form now on file with the office of Student Affairs is dated prior to Feb. 1965 a new form should be obtained by the student. When completed this form or a letter mentioned above should be filed with the Student Affairs office before March 31.

Students who are not currently receiving financial aid and would like to do so should apply before the March 31 deadline. Forms are available in the office of Student Affairs which is open Mon. through Fri. from 8:30 a. m. to 5:30 p.m. and until 6:30 p. m. on Mondays.

Tim Britton received the Student Party nomination for Student Body President by acclamation at the group's spring nominating convention Wed. March 9.

Britton is a rising senior who has been active in student government as a representative from the Junior class and chairman of the Student Legislature Finance committee. He has also served as a judge in the Student Court, a member of FAC and speaker pro-tem of the Legislature.

The nominations for two other executive council positions, vice-president, and secretary were also filled by acclamation. Sam Scott, a rising junior, received the party nod for the V-P position while Wilma Happy received the SP endorsement for secretary. Both Scott and Happy have been active in the Legislature this year with Scott heading the Judicial committee and Happy serving as secretary for the Legislature.

In a close balloting Sue Garrett defeated Frank Jones for the party endorsement for Treasurer. Miss Garrett is a rising senior who is also a member of the Legislature.

The only other endorsement given by the convention went to Frank Jones who edged out Jan Galloway for the nomination for University Union Chairman.

Proceedings were begun to endorse class officer nominees but they were aborted on a motion from the floor because it was felt that not enough time was left in the meeting to allow for this action. The position of president of the Senior class and Vice President of the Senior class had been filled but were disallowed as a result of the successful motion.

The group also selected a new chairman to replace Britton who resigned to accept the presidential nomination. Mitch Borden won in a close vote over party vice-chairman Ben Horack for this position.

Tim Britton

Sam Scott

The Student Party's platform was adopted by the membership by a unanimous vote after only one minor change.

The platform urges a revision of the present faculty-student advisor setup and calls for a "complete Student Government constitutional revision" to free the Legislature from the rigidity of the present document. The party also pledges to "do all possible to encourage the establishment of national fraternities and sororities" on campus and to work out a system for student discounts with local merchants.
