Tim Britton, Student Body President, displays a sinister side of his personality by not so gently maneuvering Rick Matheney to the mat.

Purpose Of Karate Study Is Not To Break Bricks But To Overcome Death

BY CAROL HAYWOOD

When asked the reason for studying karate, Rick Matheney, holder of his green belt in karate, responded with the following questions and answers:

"To learn to break bricks? To learn the katas, formal exercises? To learn to win contests?"

"No. The reason for studying karate is to acquire serenity ... to acquire serenity by overcoming fear ... death, and to overcome death is the Spirit of karate."

"Karate," an ancient and once secret Oriental art of self-defense, means "empty hand." It resembles a combination of boxing and the French feet fighting, Savate.

Alfredo Sui, a twenty-year-old engineering student, holds his fourth-degree black belt. A native of Peru, Alfredo has been in the U. S. for about a year and a half.

Tim Britton, President of the Student Body, holds his brown belt in karate. He has been studying karate since he was six, and he is presently instructing members of the Kung-Fu Society in karate.

"Don't hurt me too badly," Rick Matheney begs his teacher Alfredo Sui. Picture by Coley.

"And just to show there are no hard feelings, I'll even help you up," Sui offers Matheney. Picture by Coley.
