"In my opinion, the meeting was a truly positive experience. The nearly 2 to 1 vote endorsing the resolution condemning expansion of the war demonstrated the UNCC faculty's awareness and integrity as responsible citizens and human beings. The willingness of the faculty to open the meeting to students and to listen to their views plus the overwhelming attitude of support for the right of peaceful dissent by students and all Americans, make the technical defeat of the wording of the second resolution unimportant. Finally, the respect given all sincere views showed real freedom of speech at work."

Faculty Supports Withdrawal

By Alan Guggenheim

While most students at UNCC were commuting homeward last Wednesday, a determined faction of the faculty endorsed a resolution drawn up by Dr. Robbins of the History Department, calling for an immediate withdrawal from our position in Cambodia.

The faculty meeting headed by Chancellor Colvard voted 62-32 in favor of the resolution. The resolution came as a result of the "silencing of four Kent State students and an increasing protest against the escalation of the Indochinese War," according to one student.

Dr. Robbins the author of the resolution said

Dr. Robbins the author of the resolution said that this endorsement was, "a massive change in the sentiments of this moderate faculty... since last Fall."

Equally as unprecedented was the unanimous invitation of the faculty to seat thirty-seven students for as long as the meeting was not disrupted. The students stayed until the meeting was adjourned.

During the faculty meeting, there was a lot of debate for and against the resolutions. Two students, Ed Wayson and Andy Pardue, were allowed to speak to the faculty about the Kent State Tragedy.

Other faculty men shared the students' sentiments and despite criticism, said that the University was an involved member of America and therefore had the duty to speak as a body. Dr. Mathis said that "the University exists for diversity" and Dr. Robbins said that this University has the right to speak out."

A second resolution was introduced to "abandon business as usual", but it was soundly defeated, causing three unidentified girls to loudly leave the meeting as Dr. Colvard called for adjourment.

The following resolutions were passed b?

the Student Legislature on Monday, May 11, 1970:

"Be it resolved that the Administration extend a public apology to Hank Parker for the inhospitable treatment that was incurred by him while visiting a PPU meeting and that we support his appeal through the courts." [One dissenting vote; introduced to Legislature by James Cuthbertson.]

"We the members of the Student Legislature as the Administration to agree to permit students boycott classes and exams for the following reasons: in memorium to the Kent State Four of to protest Nixon's policies in Southeast Asia of the order to participate in the conference with in order to participate in the conference with in order to participate in Washington on Tuesgovernmental officials in Washington on Tuesday [May 12, 1970]. [Unanimous passage; introduced to Legislature by Ed Wayson.]
