The Concord Street Railway.

The Standard has it from good authority that the people will soon see a change in the street railway. Some people have complained that it remained here unused. Once or twice the Standard has spoken of it as a great inconvenience as it now is. But there are two sides to all things. The road was built for the benefit and improvement of Concord; and it did advertise the town more than any one thing that has been inaugurated in Concord for the last ten years. The gentlemen, who were behind it, while they hoped to make it a paying investment gave the town the benefit of a splendid advertisement. That it did not succeed is not the fault of the gentlemen who spent their money. Many of them lost money, some few very heavily, and let us all have patience until a change is effected. It is coming, but all things can not be done in one day.
