THAT PROTEST.

What became of the Document which the Democrats in the Legislature Wanted Spread Upon the Journals...

It will be remembered that when the Fizzelist Legislature adjourned out of respect to Fred Douglass, the arch miscegenationist, the Democratic members framed a protest...

The Messenger is now prepared to answer the questions. All this time Mr. J. B. Moore of Burgaw, Pender county, has had it in his pocket.

He claims to have picked it up from the floor? Did he pick it up from the floor? Did he drop it on the floor? If so why did he not put it in its proper place instead of in his pocket?

Send it, Mr. Moore, to Col. Coke, Secretary of State, and let him put it on the records where it properly belongs. Let generations to come know there were a few Legislators in that never-to-be-forgotten assembly who were opposed to miscegenation...

Charles Cruse Shot.

Late Friday evening Charles Cruse, a colored boy of this city who lives on East Depot street, while cleaning his old revolver, thinking it unloaded, began snapping it and watching the cylinder work, when suddenly it went off, lodging a ball in the calf of his left leg...

He Wanted to Break in Jail.

Monday as the Federal court visitors had begun to come in, a number of prisoners were brought to jail, which came down West on the train in the evening. Some little time after the United States Marshalls had deposited their prisoners at the jail and left, a primitive moonshiner came up and asked Mr. Nicholson if "this was the jail, and if any Mitchell county Marshall had been there." He was told that they had. The man demanded supper, saying he had a quarter to pay for it; while he ate he told Mr. Nicholson that he was a part of that crowd that had been there and that they ran off and left him at the depot, and the marshalls must be found. He said he was a prisoner and had paid a negro ten cents to find the jail and that he was here on Uncle Sam's expense, and must have his place inside. The jailer told him if it was his desire, he would lock him up and that he should not break in. He was turned in and next morning the Marshalls were scouring the earth for their man until they finally found him in jail.—Statesville Mascot.

A Proud Husbandman.

A prominent citizen of Concord who ... in the country a few days ago reports that he saw a cart in the riviera [with a large and comfortable-looking umbrella over his head. This is a good way to Pharrm and we commend this Pharrm's sagacity.

The Ladies at Work.

The ladies of the Memorial Association are now at work in earnest making arrangements for appropriate exercises on the 10th of May, which comes on Friday, when the graves of the heroic soldiers in our graveyards will be covered with the beautiful flowers that are now so plentiful, both Confederates and Union alike. There will be no discrimination on Decoration Day.

Efforts are being made, also, to have addresses by prominent confederates, of which we will let you know more about later.

Considerable underhand work is going on in the fusion ranks, but to what extent and what accomplishments they have made we are yet unable to tell. We have of some very interesting things, but as we do not credit them it is best not to mention them.
