This weather is getting to be a serious matter. Farmers are waiting patiently to sow wheat but can't turn a furrow. The ground is as hard as a rock almost and nothing can be done. There is a suspicion that we may have rain soon, however. Showers are falling in the eastern part of the State and once the ice is broken we may expect our share.

In the course of a trip almost from one end of the State to the other Col. Oids, of Raleigh, says he found two things which are unusual, and both due to the drought. One was the death of many trees, nearly all oaks on clay lands, and but few of these of any considerable size, and the absence of any fresh plowed lands. Why the oaks on the sandy lands stood the drought and intense heat better than those on clay soils is a hard question to answer. The water supply in the sandy sections is claimed to have been more regular than elsewhere. What will be the percentage of fall-sown grain is as yet problematical, for as yet none has been put in the ground. In the mountains, both the trees and the crops stood the drought better than elsewhere.
