The Raleigh correspondent of the Charlotte Observer tells a good one at the expense of a citizen of the capital city. He says the editor of a leading religious paper there happens to be of precisely the same name as a well-known young society man who is soon to be married in an Episcopal church. The editor is getting letters now from his zealous church folk, wanting to know why in the world he is to be married out of his own church. Some of these kind enquirers also want to know what he means by "leading germans in Raleigh;" that they see his name in the papers in that capacity.

Made a Rooster Drink.

Two mischievous youngsters of the city early this (Friday) morning caught one of Mr. McNinch's fine roosters and forced some whiskey, pure corn, down its little throat. The effect the spirits had upon the fowl was amusing. It crowed, of course, flopped its wings, turned summersaults, reeled about for some time, and when last seen by several young men, it was standing on its head, trying to grasp a limb to a cedar bush with its feet.

Guard at the Jail.

Sometime after night fall Thursday evening Sheriff Sims received information that a mob of several hundred men were heading for this city for the purpose of lynching the man, white, who is held for an outrage upon poor unfortunate Sallie Barbee, whereupon the Sheriff promptly prepared for their arrival by stationing a guard at the jail. No one appeared to molest the jail, however, and at 4 o'clock this morning the guard was dismissed.

"Dr. White" showed no signs of fears, and in his warm cell enjoys quite and repose and the pleasure of smoking cigarettes. His comforts and safety are well considered, and it is thought that there is no danger of an uprising now, for the chances for lynching, it is said, were afforded the mob before his preliminary trial on Wednesday.

The guard that would have resisted and routed the supposed mob was composed of the following men:

Q E Smith R. L. Keesler
Eddy Morrison J. P. Query
J. L. Boger Will Johnson
Dr. Reed J D Bost
Jay Sims Mann Stuart

Sheriff Sims. Sheriff Sims informed a reporter this afternoon that White had been safely removed from the jail. He would not tell if he had taken him out of town or not. No trouble is looked for tonight, although it might be that the sheriff will place a guard at the jail to protect the other prisoners.
