A Big Mistake.
Sheriff Sims, after all, is but human. He's done gone and made a big mistake. Besides playing a practical joke on a few innocent town people as well as himself, he missed an opportunity of showing good judgement.

He expected a mob Thursday night to call at the county jail for Dr. White, the "Ingin," and take him out and put him on the road to the great hereafter—so he had Master Jay Sims to take the doctor off and hide him and then deputized a dozen innocent men to sit up at the jail all night awaiting the appearance of the mob to inform them that Dr. White wasn't at home.

The mistake is not in providing a reception committee to do courtesies to the men whom the Sheriff expected to call for Dr. White, but he made his mistake in the men selected. Why didn't he deputize several dozen of the Life Insurance Agents, among them a 320 pounder, who are now in the city? They could face any kind of an assemblage and tell them how awful it is to die without an insurance policy and thus persuade them to go off and insure before having the Sheriff's Gatling gun turn on 'em.

P. S. One of the reception committee had a great big pistol in his pistol pocket. He thought he was loaded for bear, but not a single cartridge was there in it. He's a nice one for a reception committee.

No One Knew Him.
Mr. and Mrs. G T Crowell have returned from Atlanta. Mr. Crowell says he never saw a familiar face during his three days stay among all that crowd. He knew that Mr. J C Wadsworth was there and contrived in every way to find him, but his efforts proved fruitless. He went to the manager of the fair ground and asked him, as he had everyone else, if he had seen anything of John Wadsworth, who stated that he had not and that he did not know him, which greatly surprised Mr. Crowell. How he escaped the manager of this big show is a puzzle to Mr. Crowell. He is there, however.
