MR. PRITCHARD'S SPEECH.

In Good Voice and Mild, Though Misleading. Rode an Old Exploded Hobby.

The Senator was happy in his preliminary remarks and took an early occasion to disavow any purpose to array any class or race against another.

The colored man is free in every sense in North Carolina and can vote as he pleases and should do so.

He said the Democrats wanted him to discuss only the financial issue. In '93 they said "4 years more of Grover and we will be in clover."

No more 5 cent cotton, but we will have 20 cent cotton. The Democrats always have the cry of "free" something. In '76 they said not free silver but free whiskey and sound money. Said we will give you cheap clothing. They won a great victory on it. They had every branch of the government and had every chance to fulfill all their promises, but did not do it. He said they had bankrupted the government and made a deficit of $13,000,000 per month. He said that the Republicans had turned over to the Democrats $128,000,000 in '92, that 32 per cent. of the laboring men were out of employment, that the great consideration was to get work for the laboring man. He claimed that Republican rule employed men and capital, that under the Harrison administration the public debt was reduced $452,000,000 and that every obligation was met, that the Wilson bill increased the public debt $262,000,000. He said that the Democrats had depended on the income tax but that a Democratic Supreme Court had declared it unconstitutional, that it took two years to change the constitution. How should we avoid the $13,000,000 per month? By taxing the foreigner with a tariff, or by laying a tax on our land and other property?

He strongly urged a tariff tax as it would come off of the foreigner. He would have Americans to make whatever she needed. He claimed that Americans could not compete with Europeans unless they went without clothing. He said the Democrats thought we ought not to tax importers, that Senator Gorman was willing to tax the coffee that was a poor man's necessary supply, but would not tax the wool that was brought into competition with the farmer.

He said the people did not like Mr. Cleveland so well now. He would only say he was entirely honest and was fearless in the conviction of duty and that he was abused for things the constitution and laws compelled him to do upon his oath, that he appealed to congress to come to the rescue and avoid the issue of bonds and that the Republican house promptly passed the Dingley bill that would have met the want, but that a Democratic Senate sat sullenly and would not do anything and the President had to issue bonds and now they were finding fault with him for it. He said that the Republicans wanted to tax foreigners, the Democrats wanted to tax our own people and asked the people to vote as they wished, for the Republicans if they wanted to tax the importer, but for the Democrats if they wanted to be taxed themselves.

He said business began to decline in '93 when Cleveland came into power. He said the Democrats said in '73 that they wanted to capture the markets of the world for the farmer and quoted census figures to show that our imports had decreased under the effort. He dwelt on the tobacco competition that he said had ruined the industry. He claimed that the Wilson bill caused all the decline in prices. He said the Democratic party is a costly luxury. He said that under Cleveland prices declined, under Harrison they advanced. That the Democrats used to yell "nigger," now they want his vote and they yell free silver, that manufacturers are stopping and many were saying they could not hold out much longer. He said that Republicans put a tariff on our farm productions, including milk, butter, etc., but the Democrats raised the tariff on liquor. He pictured the town of Cranberry, booming and blooming under Republican and declining under Democratic rule. He eulogized McKinley and promised the South to bloom with prosperity if he were elected. He would not speak much of Cleveland—the people hated him—but would quote Mr. Bryan who had said it was immaterial whether the Wilson bill raised the price of wool or not. He said Mr. Bryan wants free lumber for Nebraskans to build houses. He did not blame him. We must each look to our interests. He told us what filled cheese is and said Democrats were opposed to taxing to protect the maker and the eaters of good cheese.

He maintained that it was incorrect to say that Republicans wanted gold only, that they wanted gold, silver and paper money, that we now have 52 times more silver coined than we had before '73, that the Republicans wanted international bimetallism and that the only way we would ever get free silver was by international agreement, and that reciprocity would force the nations to adopt it. He said that Mr. Bryan admitted that free coinage would cause a panic but that it was like giving a sick man medicine that made him sicker at first, then cured him. The Senator ridiculed the idea.

He touched lightly on Mr. Dockery's leaving and thought he would find out his folly at "sucking time."
