DEATH WAS HIS RELIEF.

Little Andrew Rose Died Friday Night at 9:30 O'clock—Was Conscious During His Suffering—His Lower Limbs an Awful Sight.

As noted in Friday afternoon's issue an awful accident occurred out at the Bala cotton mill that afternoon when Andrew, the nine-year-old son of Superintendent A J Rose, was caught by a shaft running from a water wheel to an old grist mill. No one knew anything of the child's whereabouts until its body was found lying under the shafting. One of his legs was torn off while the other was crushed almost to a pulp. It was awful for human eyes to behold, but still more serious to find the little boy suffering such agony and pain as he was, though conscious some of the time until he died.

The accident occurred about 3 o'clock and life stayed with the little son until 9:30 o'clock. With the lower part of his body in such a condition and amid such suffering as he endured his death was nothing more than was waited for by the friends gathered at his side.

No one will ever know just exactly how the accident occurred, more than that his lower limbs were caught by the shafting. The upper part of his body seems not to have suffered from the accident.

REV. DANIEL LINDLEY

Taught Oom Paul—Reminiscences of the Missionary—They Laughed Out.

The following is taken from the Monthly Bulletin, published at Lincolnton:

"Our Presbytery feels special concern in the dreadful war in South Africa. Rev. Daniel Lindley went there as a missionary from First church, Charlotte, N. C., in 1835, and found Paul Kruger a lad, whom he trained and has developed a sturdy life that strains the resources of the British Empire. Dr. Lindley labored along the Tugela river and Zululand, where I sent letters to him as stated clerk of Presbytery in the seventies, written by the venerable Dr. Morrison."—Charlotte Observer of 2nd.

Our attention has been called to the above by some of the intelligent Presbyterians here with some slight corrections and interesting references to the sainted missionary.

We are told that the Rev. Daniel Lindley went, not from Charlotte, but from Rocky River congregation.

At meetings of the Presbytery his name was always called with the other ministers on the roll of Concord Presbytery.

For forty years till 1875 there was no response when his name was called, but then in the present church of the First Presbyterian congregation in Concord at a meeting of the Presbytery when his name was called he answered and rose and touched the hearts of all as he spoke in fervent, pathetic greeting.

The great, stalwart figure, whose flowing white beard made him an ideal patriarch, fixed an indelible image on the minds of the young.

He returned to the neighborhood that he had left so long before and visited and worshipped in probably every home of his surviving parishioners.

When the missionary left he had with him his wife and Dr. and Mrs. John M Wilson, of Charlotte. Dr. Wilson was a brother of the late Lawyer Harvey Wilson, and he went as missionary physician.

Rev. Lindley had the grief of losing the three whose dust is now probably shaken by the explosions and roar of modern warfare.

It is indeed interesting to think that from our very midst in the person of Rev. Lindley went out the man who baptised, taught and ingrafted piety and churchiness in the stern and rugged Oom Paul Kruger who rules his people almost as a dictator, in civil affairs, while he exercises his ministerial functions on the Sabbath—a second Cromwell and one of the finest examples extant of the biblical "mighty man," the man now putting up the stiffest front, the broadest shoulders and the most rigid backbone against which Great Britain has thrust herself since the days of Waterloo.

In this connection we will ask the reader to stay with us a little longer to take in the following story:

The venerable missionary was in Rocky River church relating incidents in connection with his work in the dark continent. He said that he had probably done nothing more beneficial and uplifting to those savage natives than teaching them how to wear clothes.

Those staid, Puritanic, blue-stocking Presbyterians who hardly ever found anything capable of provoking a smile in the sanctuary, lost their church decorum when the missionary told them that the natives persisted in wanting to put on a shirt by catching by the tail and thrusting their feet down through and out at the risbands. This was too much and they laughed right out which caused the reverend gentleman to use his knuckles on the reading desk.

Plague Getting Near.

A Washington dispatch of the 28th gives the following unwelcome news:

"The surgeon general of the Marine Hospital Service has been informed that the bubonic plague has appeared on the island of Cozuel, off the coast of Yucatan. It was brought there from Brazil. Quarantine officers in Mexico, in the Gulf States and in Cuba and Porto Rico, have been directed to observe strict quarantine.
