There are as many blind tigers hovering around the dispensary as ever set up in dry towns. The blind tiger in the dispensary town does business at night after the dispensary closes. There will be blind tigers any and everywhere that dirty scoundrels live to sell whiskey and dirty vagabonds live to buy it. I am proud to say that the Rome dispensary, so far, has been well managed, and so long as it is well managed it can never do a land office business. The management of a dispensary has got to hold it up or it will drag them down. Human philosophy tells us, take the lesser of two evils; divine philosophy tells us, take neither. I have always contended that a saloon run decently, by a respectable man, was a more dangerous place for our boys than a bum saloon run by an old bum. It is a question in my mind how far Christianity can go in its control and management of the sale of liquor, of bawdy houses, or gambling hells, without being particeps criminis to the devilment done by them. Suppose Christianity takes charge of every gambling hell in America and guaranantees a fair deal and advertise to the
