BISHOP FOSS ON THE MOUNTAIN PEOPLE.

Charlotte Chronicle.
In Chicago, the other day, a female "missionary" spun up a fine tale about a colony of po' whites she had located in the mountains near Lenoir. She made a touching appeal for old clothes and odd pieces of furniture which she proposed to carry to them and show them, we suppose, how to wear clothes, sit on a chair—they are floor squatters, according to the report—and how to deal with a knife and fork. Perhaps it was her talk which brought a statement from Bishop Foss, in Chicago. As reported in The Chicago Chronicle, he says that 250,000 is a large and liberal estimate of the number of debased and besotted souls who really answer to the current descriptions, and these are scattered over a great stretch of territory. Not are they confined wholly to the Southern mountains. He says: "I have seen them coming down out of the woods at Highland Falls, N. Y., carrying their little bundles of kindling and their baskets of berries for sale, and I understand on good authority that one may run across them even in New England. It is a true and noble instinct that seeks to help them. The most of them, if rightly approached, are accessible to Christian influences. By force of circumstances they have simply been crowded down, and have lost hope of better conditions. Whoever is willing to serve them surely has the spirit of Christ."
"God forbid that I should speak an unjust or harsh word concerning the good men and women that have put their hands to their great task. I give them my sympathy and commendation in full measure. They will find out very speedily that there is not much romance in their toil, but an endless round of drudgeries and many bitter disappointments. Sooner or later they will see that their only wisdom is to assist these belated and unfortunate Americans to assist themselves. Every ounce of effort that goes beyond that point will be in vain."
But Bishop Foss does not stop there. He declares that "there is more ignorance, more immorality, more downright heathenism in lower New York than in all the Southern mountains put together." "The great majority of the mountaineers, as I have before said, are excellent citizens, loving their country and their flag, obeying its laws without reluctance and ready to fight for it whenever any fighting needs to be done. They are the descendants of the men who rode with Sevier and Shelby to King's Mountain in 1780 and of those who followed Jackson to New Orleans in 1815." "Of the characteristics of these people, Bishop Foss says: "In the civil war they divided sharply. Neutrality is foreign to their nature. They are always on one side or the other, and have a perfectly glorious capacity for partisanship. The bulk of them are great lovers of their homes and their families. Honesty, courage and hospitality are almost universal among them. Corn cribs go unlocked the year round, and families work in the field, leaving their homes unoccupied and wide open all day long. To be known as a coward is to lose standing. To turn away a stranger who seeks food and shelter is unheard of. Anarchists and communists are, of course, out of the question. Belief in Christianity is wide-spread and is followed by membership in some church." "He has defined their character well. In the mountains of this State, it is unnecessary to look either house, kitchen, barn or corn crib. Whenever 'night' overtakes a traveler, he is sure of a welcome at the first house he comes to and the best there is, in the house. A better people never lived. It is time that these periodical slanders against them by ill-informed sentimentalists should cease. Let those like Bishop Foss, who know the people, do the talking."

BARRINGER MINE DISASTER.

An Explanation Made of How It Occurred.
Special to State Chronicle.
SALISBURY, Aug. 23.—Mr. E. M. Davis returned last night from the Barringer Mine, the scene of the frightful disaster of ten days ago, and reports the finding of all the bodies that perished in the awful debacle. Mr. Davis went down Friday to prepare the bodies for burial as they were found and had ample opportunities to see how the disaster took place from beginning to end. It has not been understood here how there could have been such a rush of water in the main shaft when the men were at work there. From a diagram it is easily seen.
When the old company managing the mine before the Whitney Company took it up, began operating it, a shaft was begun something like a hundred feet from the present one. They went down but a short distance having discovered that the ore ran in a different course than the one they were making. Then they made a second opening between the Whitney's shaft and this first one. This was followed by various apertures until these courses were run down to a depth of 150 feet where they empty into the shaft now used by the Whitney people. Above the old shaft is the low ground which was flooded by the waters. Without any warning, the waters rushed into this unguarded hole and in a few minutes it had filled the 200 foot shaft of the Whitney Company within 40 feet of the top. The negro, Jim Reed, was the first to discover the trouble. To the young man, Will Canup, who perished, he said the water was rushing in. Canup said: "Let's run back and get our buckets." This cost him his life. When they had returned the water was three feet deep. Reed climbed 30 feet through and fell into the bucket which was coming up. This saved him. Young Canup and two others died on the ladder which they had climbed for 30 feet. The other five men were found back in the remotest corner of the mine, never having been given a chance for their lives.
The superintendent, Thomas Moyle, had a close call. He had just come up from the mine and the bucket had descended. When he discovered the rush of the water, he ran to investigate the trouble. When he had returned the shaft was filled within fifty feet of the top. It has been estimated that 100,000,000 gallons of water went into that place within a period of 7 minutes.
Col. Hamilton C. Jones Dead.
Special to Charlotte Observer.
WILMINGTON, Aug. 22.—Col. Hamilton C. Jones, of Charlotte, one of the foremost lawyers in the State, a gentleman of rare culture and refinement, died here this afternoon as he was being taken up stairs on the elevator at the James Walker Memorial Hospital, on his way back from Southport, where he had been for rest and recuperation after his arduous work as counsel for the defendant in the recent Breese trial at his home. Yesterday Col. Jones had a turn for the worse and his physician at Southport, after communication by telegraph with the family at Charlotte, and Dr. R. J. Brevard, decided that it would be best to remove the patient to the hospital in Wilmington. Accompanied by Dr. J. A. Dzier, Col. Jones was brought up the city at 1:30 p. m. today and was met here by Dr. Brevard, who arrived this morning. It was seen that Col. Jones was very weak, but it was hoped to reach the hospital in time to save him. His heart failed him, however, as he was being taken up stairs. Death was due to a complication of heart and liver troubles.
"Port Arthur to Be My Tomb," Says Stoesel.
Moscow, Aug. 22.—"Farewell forever. Port Arthur will be my tomb."
Thus Gen. Stoesel, commanding the Port Arthur garrison, ends a telegram to one of his most intimate friends here.
It was reported when Gen. Stoesel set out to take command at Port Arthur that he told his friends he would never return, and he has told his soldiers that he will never surrender. It is reported, too, that Gen. Stoesel sent his wife and children to Chefoo on the destroyer Reshiteln, which the Japanese seized in that part. His presentiment that Port Arthur will be his tomb seems to have become a conviction.
Mysterious Circumstance.
One was pale and sallow and the other fresh and rosy. Whence the difference? She who is blushing with health uses Dr. King's New Life Pills to maintain it. By gently arousing a lax organ they compel good digestion and head off constipation. Try them. Only 35c. at all druggists.

COTTON AND ITALIAN LABOR.

Baltimore Sun.
With a prospect of a large crop this year the cotton planters are considering the problem of picking it, and are disposed to try Italian labor. Colored labor is scarce and will be insufficient if the size of the crop is very materially increased. The planted area is wider than ever before, owing to expectations excited by the recent high prices of cotton. Prices will fall greatly, it is supposed, in case the coming crop promises to exceed the normal demand for cotton. The New England mills are in fact selling their stocks of raw cotton, partly because of the strike, perhaps, but chiefly because they expect cheap cotton this fall as a result of a bumper crop, and expect to buy to advantage when the new crop comes in. Cotton experts, who feel sure of superabundant cotton, are even calculating at what price cotton will be when the planters will prefer to leave it unpicked, seeing no profit in gathering it. Scarcity of labor at picking time enhances the cost so much that cotton is at times left in the fields. The Italian laborer will help materially to meet the difficulty. A concentrated effort to direct the large stream of Italian labor Southward is said to be in contemplation, to the advantage not only of the cotton planters, but of the agriculture of the South generally. Our contemporary, the New York Tribune, notices the new movement only to object to it by a misrepresentation. Referring vaguely to the lynching of negro assailants of white women in the South, the Tribune suggests that lynching is to be feared by Italians also, though they are not given to assaulting unprotected women and children. "The descendants of the ancient Romans," says our veracious contemporary, "will not submit to the outrages, etc. The Italian immigrants can get work in the North. They will not labor long in the cotton plantations of the South unless they are treated fairly." Very true. The "descendants of the Romans" will get perfectly fair treatment in the South, and will find the climate vastly more congenial than that of the North.
