WANTS EXPERIMENTAL FARM IN PASQUOTANK

Representative Cohoon Brings Out Bill Which Would Permit This.

Elizabeth City, N. C., Jan. 27.—Representative F. E. Cohoon's plan to establish an experimental farm in this county has taken shape in a bill which would create the Pasquotank Commission of Agriculture with power to start and operate one or more of these farms.

The measure would place experimental farming, including the work of the county farm agent and home demonstration agent, under the commission. The members of the body would be appointed by the assembly and there would be but one change in the personnel at each session. Proponents of the bill contend its passage would end what is termed "biennial controversies" on continuing the work of farm and home demonstration agents and tick eradication campaigns in the county.

The commission, according to the measure's provision, would be empowered to foster co-operative marketing and buying and to establish standards of grade and packing of all farm produce grown here. A county brand, under which all produce grown here would be sold, would be adopted.

Farms for experimental purposes would be acquired either through purchase or lease and the commission would have the authority to buy equipment. A livestock expert would be engaged to direct livestock growing in the county. A levy of taxes would finance the commission's operations.

The commissioners proposed in the measure are S. W. Scott, two years; Zenas Jennings and M. B. Sample, four years, and S. B. Parsons and A. E. Cohoon, six years.
