This is a loss to the public which threatens in the form of higher casualty and liability rates. For letters are being received by the accident department from insurance companies n all sections of the country asking for the monthly accident reports. And if these accidents continue to increase, there is no doubt but that the companies issuing accident insurance policies and various forms of automobile liability and casualty insurance will be forced to increase their rates in the state, according to Stacey

Wade, commissioner of insurance. "So far North Carolina has enjoyed the same rates for these types of insurance as have other states," said Mr. Wade, "but if the number of automobile accidents keeps on increasing as in the past few months in this state will eventually be raised, just as the fire insurance rates were raised when fire loses became excessive. So it would be well to take some steps to reduce the number of accidents right now.
