PUPILS SEEKING TO EQUIP HIGH SCHOOL LIBRARY ADEQUATELY

Faculty and Student Body Requirements.

Assiduously faculty members and tudent organizations are bending efforts to equip the Concord high school with an adequate library.

The school wants a library with sufficient collateral reference books in English, history, science and also fiction books which have stood the test of time and earned an immortal place in literature. It is not a question of volumes but rather the right sort of books which give comprehensive material for detailed research and parallel study.

The high school library possesses at the present approximately 2.000 books, including history, science, English, fiction, biographies of national and international persons who have gone down in history and a wealth of information on the hundred and one other things that occupy attention

Some thirty new books have been added to the school library since the beginning of the current scholastic year, and A. H. Jarratt, principal hopes to increase this number to much larger figures before commencement. Several plans through which funds books are under consideration.

The Concord high school library is operated on the same plan as any The students appreciate the library, relying upon it as a source of additional information on problems of the class rooms. During the first six weeks of the present session, more than 900 books were read by the stu-

TELLS TEACHERS TO LOOK TO CHRIST AS PERFECT EDUCATOR

Mrs Roe Addresses Large Audience at High School Building Here on Monday Afternoon.

Pointing to the early life of the Great Teacher, Himself, as the best example for modern educators to follow in training the young, Mrs. Chas. Pemberton spent Sunday here, and E. Roe, field secretary of the National P.-T. A., in an address before the combined membership of the Parent-Teachers' Association of Concord and Cabarrus county Monday afternoon at the High School, urged parents and teachers to see to it that the children of today receive a "foursquare" education which will fit them for abundant and intelligent service, not in the far-distant future, but right now.

Prior to the address of the afternoon, the entire assemblage sang "My Tribute," Mrs. Roe's favorite of the association songs, which she says should be sung at every P.-T. A. meeting in the land. - Hobart S. Davis then rendered a vocal selection, "The Lass With a Delicate Air," after which Mrs. Charles A. Cannon, president of the Central Primary P.-T. A., introduced the speaker.

Mrs. Roe prefaced her address by quoting a statement by Dr. Cubberley of Leland Stanford University in which he asserts that "The P.-T. A. movement is the greatest movement in education today.'

As a basis for her discussion of a 'foursquare' education, Mrs. Roe quoted that very comprehensive verse of Scripture that contains the very little that is known of the childhood of Christ: "And Jesus increased in wisdom, in stature and in favor with God and man." "Wisdom" might well indicate the mental development to be expected of the foursquare type of education; "stature" refers, naturally, to the physical side; "in favor with God and man" signifies the spirty Monday by Register of Deeds El- itual and social development, respectively.

For the comfort of pessimistic, reactionary, or over-romantic souls inclined to bewail the passing of the little red schoolhouse on the Mil, where the teaching of the classic "three R's" was aided by a generous application of the fourth R-Rulin', the speaker stated that in modern education the three R's were superseded, or rather supplemented, by the three C's-Culture, Citizenship and Character.

Mrs. Roe explained that the school, having the child under its care only ne-seventh of his time, should not be held responsible for his whole education, which should, and does, go on twenty-four hours of each day. But since the home has been failing in its greater part, and only one-third of the children in America attend Sunday School, the school has had to undertake most of the responsibility for his ethical and physical training as well as mental.

Modern education, the speaker exfans from Concord and other points plained, has seven cardinal principles in Cabarrus will witness the two which lie back of every curriculum, games, the most important for the and strive to meet every need of the child in his foursquare development. These big objectives are: (1) sound health; (2) worthy home memberstandstill here Thursday. All of the ship; (3) mastery of tools and technic effectiveness; (5) wise use of leisure ethical character.

As an example of vocational effeciveness, the speaker cited the instance of a certain college which offers a course in parenthood in which a large number of girls ane enrolled, and they are planning to offer a course for boys. Not only are these girls taught woman's highest calling. heoretically, but they receive practical training as well, for they have entire care of two live babies, and a class of 16 "toddlers" which they are to observe, and report to their instructors upon the character and habits they see in formation. They study he child of over-average social age, the natural-born leader who should be taught to train others to lead, for there is potential leadership in nearly everyone, if opportunity offers. They also observe the child of high mentality, who is too often under average in social age. Such a child must be trained and encouraged to work or play in harmony and co-operation with the group, so that his superior intelligence may not be lost to the

The speaker made an earnest plea for supervised play, asserting that money spent in this way often prevents the expense of repeaters. That people do not know how to play was abundantly proved in the examination of soldiers for the war, she explained. She also urged parents to allow music to have a big part in the lives of their children, and spoke of the benefits of school bands and

Mrs. Roe hailed the P.-T. A., whose emblem is a spreading oak, the trunk being the national organization, the branches, the state associations, the twigs, the local associations, and the leaves the individual members, as the common ground where, in the name of the child, people of different creeds, beliefs, and opinions may met. - Its aim might well be summarized in this quotation: "The young are going to see great things. Our task is to make straight the way.", She urged parents and teachers to go to the meetings regularly, not to get something, but to give something.
