GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

Of English prachers, Whitefield by far the first. Many have surpased pproached him as a pulpit orator. His nfluues was the same, whether addressing the most fearned or the rudest auditory. Garrick used to weep and ven the cold Hume said he was worth walking twenty miles to hear. But the greatest proof of his power is, that he could gather and keep around in awed stience the whole rabble of Bartholomew Fair. For a time in Mugland he decried and abused, carrentured Hogarth, and ridiculed by Foste; but he soon lived down such hystitily and lamelessness of his character as well as by the wonderful effect of his elequence and seal. Since Cowper's worthy panogyrie of him, as has been the case with Bunyan also, men of taste and learning have forborne to speak of the great Methodist press or otherwise than with admiration andpraise.
