

COL. J. M. GALLOWAY WRITES.

Is It Unconstitutional to Cut Up a Blockade Still Without Trial Before a Court.

Editor Reporter:

The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States contains these words: "Nor shall any person be deprived of life, liberty or property without 'due process of law.'" It is said that North Carolina presented this amendment as a condition precedent to her entering the Union. If so it reflects credit on her statesmen of that day, for the essential principles of Magna Charta are all embodied in this amendment. Judge Story and Judge Cooley, our two most able commentators on the Constitution, both agreed that "due process of law" means trial before a competent court. Judge Story intimates that a trial by jury is necessary as being more in conformance with the principles of Magna Charta. If so the sentence might read "Nor shall any person be deprived of life, liberty or property without a trial by a competent court." There is a clause in the Internal Revenue Laws of the United States which authorizes a revenue officer to cut a still caught in the act of distillation. Governor Seales, who was a member of Congress at the time this clause was enacted, told me its unconstitutionality was freely discussed and generally admitted at the time of enactment, but it was thought impossible to enforce the revenue law without it. The legal adviser of the New York World wrote me there could be no question about it. Senator Edmunds, in his day the highest Constitutional authority in the Senate, expressed a similar opinion.

The revenue law itself admits the principle, for it forbids the cutting of big stills until condemned by a court. The little still can be cut—its owner has no money and no friends to test the question before a court.

The papers tell us that the recent session of the Legislature passed an act authorizing sheriffs to cut stills caught in the act of illicit distillation. If so where were the 93 lawyer members of that body? Were they like the disciples at the garden of Gethsemane—all asleep? Can a Legislature constitutionally authorize a sheriff to cut down a man's orchard without a trial? A still is certainly property. To destroy it without a trial violates the fundamental principles of Anglo-Saxon liberty. The matter has not heretofore been tested because the idea prevails that United States officers acting officially are beyond the reach of State process. A sheriff is not, and those who cut stills may have them to pay for.

Governor Glenn, Senator Simmons and Senator Overman occupy the three highest positions in point of honor in the gift of the people of North Carolina. I make a personal appeal to them to throw the weight of their influence in favor of a better observance of the Constitution. If Constitutional liberty is to survive in America salvation must come from the South.

Our Northern brethren in their eager race for wealth and their too rapid importation of foreigners are already face to face with the grave problem of Concentrated Wealth vs. Socialism. Take Rockefeller as a type of Concentrated Wealth, and the assassin of McKinley as a type of Socialism. What chance for Constitutional principles in the success of either? Take the Equitable Life at one end and the Chicago strikers at the other and where could Constitutional principles get in?
