A trial had been set for 3 o'clock at Sheppard's store in which Nelies Cardwell, wife of Frank Cardwell, had been arraigned on the charge of selling liquor. From Rev. J. A. Clark Preaches Good Ser. 75 to 100 persons, among whom were a few witnesses and a large number of spectators, came out to the trial. In the crowd soon appeared Sisk and Nelson. Sisk had a repeating shotgun which he was showing to a bystander when Deputy Smith, seeing the men for whom he had papers, ordered Jim Tom Lawson to assist him in the arrest, at the same time drawing his revolver and commanding Nelson to throw up his hands. Nelson refused to do so, but began backing and making an effort to pull a pistol. Smith fired over his head to scare him into surrender, but instead Nelson drew a Smith & Wesson and began blazing away at the officer, one shot quite a jolly time. taking effect in Smith's knee, who sank down and leveling his Colt's began firing at Nelson who was day fast escaping to the woods. Nelson was hit in several places, and was bleeding profusely. Sisk made his way toward Smithtown but his suffering becoming so acute, he had to ask assistance of a wagon passing near John Lawson's which brought him back to the scene of the fight where he was placed under arrest. Nelson escaped.

About 4 o'clock a phone message reached here from the scene of the battle, asking for a physician to attend Smith's wound and for Deputy Sheriff Davis to come at once.
