ENTERTAINING LETTER.

A Former Stokes Boy Writes Interestingly of Things "Down South."

Hamlet, N. C., Jan. 8.

Editor Reporter:

With the dawn of the New Year, I left Greensboro over the Southern Railway, No. 33 fast train for the South, passing numerous prosperous towns and cities. I am by noon in Columbia, the capital of the great old Palmetto State. I rest for a few hours until next train going my route, and by 6 p. m. get off at a little wayside station called East, over in the heart of the cotton growing regions. Here I find an institution not found anywhere else south the Mason and Dixon line, a free delivery for the school children of the district. Morning and afternoon you see a merry crowd of happy children going to and from school in a bus built expressly for their transportation. I am informed that four or five schools were consolidated and a graded school established and that this feature attracts a larger attendance and that the difference in the cost of maintaining the several schools separately more than pays the expense of hiring the men to operate these deliveries.

Well, my work is complete by Thursday and I leave over the Atlantic Coast Line for Sumter. Here I find the true sportsman. Sumter, a town of 12,000 inhabitants has 65 automobiles. I became weary with the continual toot, toot! of these machines as they give warning that they are coming. Well Sumter is a good town to spend Sunday, although there is no place like home to the true "knight of the grip." Sunday morning dawns warm and clear and I go for a walk over concrete sidewalks and paved streets, past beautiful homes where I see in the yards large bushes of cape jessamines in full bloom and I compare in mind the difference between the dead, bleak winter of western North Carolina and this sunny clime where the violets are now in full bloom. I am much impressed with the city hospital which is built with the new concrete blocks made like a stone from sand concrete which hardens with age and becomes as serviceable as granite. There are several factories in Sumter that manufacture these building blocks. I suppose the hospital with its furnishings must have cost at least $75,000. Well, I became weary of walking before I have seen near all the streets of interest and go back to the hotel and am in bed by nine o'clock to fight at one or two old mosquitoes who have survived the colds so far and who seem to think they should bite you in January as well as July. Sumter is the next best town to Charleston in the lower S. C. country and the only thing I dislike about the town is that water is running the year round in gutters of its streets, but from a sanitary standpoint, its system is perfect. Well, Monday morning finds me on my way to historic Camden, passing 30 miles through vast swamps and some fine farming lands. I arrive in the town where there is a monument erected in memory of the great Baron DeKalb, who came from France to help American patriots in their struggle for liberty during the Revolutionary war. There is also a monument to the memory of a famous Mexican war lieutenant, but I failed to take his name. There is a grave of an Irish lassie near Camden who followed Cornwallis to America to see her lover who was dead when she arrived, and she died and was buried by the soldiers and the tombstone is still there. Camden has three tourist hotels and is now full of people from up north who came South for the winter. Golf and polo are leading pastimes and quite interesting to me. Some idea as to the growing wealth of this great country is demonstrated by the bank statements of Sumter and Orangeburg; there is on deposit in these twotowns over four million dollars. Just think of these things, young man from Stokes, when you emigrate west. Change your mind, come to a sunny clime where you can grow almost anything and where money is easy. Sooner or later the "nigger" will be a thing of the past as a help to the Southern farmer and the people now are anxious to get emigrants from the foreign countries to replace them. A negro is good to shine shoes and wait on tables and run errands around towns. He is like a pigeon, loves a congregation of white houses and the "toot" of a railroad train.
