ACID PHOSPHATE.

Shall We Continue to Use It—Selected By "Mc."

The following extract from an article by Chas. E. Thorne, of the Ohio Experiment Station, and published in the Ohio "Farmer" of Jan. 2, 1904, may prove of interest to our farmers:

Up to the present season I have advised the purchase of acid phosphate, so long as the pound of available phosphoric acid could be bought in that carrier as cheaply as in other materials, insisting that the farmer needs fear no injurious results from sulphuric acid used in acidulating the rock phosphate.

For a number of years farmers in this region, and in other sections of eastern Ohio, have had increasing difficulty in getting and holding a stand of clover. The seed may germinate and start off fairly well but after the wheat is taken off, the stand of clover is found to be irregular, with spots on which the young plants make little or no growth. The following spring these spots are larger, in many cases they increase until they practically cover the field. This trouble was first observed at this station in the clover crops of 1898 and 1899, the crops for the latter season and since being almost complete failures.

Examination of the soil with lithius paper showed an acid condition, and in 1900 half of one-section of the five-year rotation at Wooster, above described, was dressed with lime, applied across the plots at the rate of 2,000 pounds per acre. Following the regular course of the rotation, this section was sown to timothy and clover in the fall of 1901 and spring of 1902, with the result that when the crop had reached the spring of 1903 the lined ends of all the fertilized plots showed an even and full stand of clover, while on the unfertilized ends there was practically no clover on the plots dressed with acid phosphate alone, or with that and potash only, and a very irregular stand where carriers of nitrogen had been added to the phosphate.

At harvest time the wheat was removed from another section in this test, half of which had been similarly limed, for the corn crop of 1901, and the clover here repeated almost identically the appearance shown on the section just described, so that we can no longer doubt that on the soil of this farm, and this soil is typical of a large area, the use of acidulated fertilizers is injurious to the clover crop. But the growth of the clover, or some crop of the clover family, is absolutely essential to profitable husbandry.

Farmers everywhere say that, so long as they grow clover, they can grow anything else, and the converse is also true, that when clover persistently refuses to grow, then other crops must steadily deteriorate.

On the other hand the great effect produced by carriers of phosphorus on most Ohio soils shows that this element must be supplied in some form if the best results are to be attained.

In view of the results above described the use of acid phosphate has been abandoned at this station, except to continue experimental work.

HOW TO PLANT A TREE.

Advice of Mr. J. Van Lindley, the Veteran Nurseryman.

1. Many persons plant a tree as they would a post. The novice in planting must consider that a tree is living, nicely-organized production, as certainly affected by good treatment as an animal. Many an orchard of trees, rudely thrust into the ground, struggles half a dozen years against the adverse condition before it recovers.

2. In planting an orchard, let the ground be made mellow by repeated plowing. For a tree of moderate size, the hole should be dug three feet in diameter and twelve to twenty inches deep. Turn over the soil several times. In every instance the hole must be large enough to admit all the roots easily without bending and the roots should go in the hole as they grew in the nursery. They should all be straight and not cramped and in masses. Shorten and pare smoothly with a knife any bruised or broken roots. Hold the tree upright while another person, making the soil fine gradually distributes in among the roots. Shake the tree gently while the filling is going on. The main secret lies in carefully filling in the mold, so that every root, and even the smallest fibre, may meet the soil; and to secure this, let the operator, with his hand, spread out the small roots and fill in the earth nicely around every one. Nine-tenths of the deaths by transplanting arise from the hollows left among the roots of the trees by a rapid and careless mode of shoveling the earth among the roots.

3. When the hole is two-thirds full pour a pail or two of water. This will settle the soil and fill up vacancies that remain. Wait until the water has sunk away and then fill up the hole, pressing the earth moderately around the tree with the foot. The moist earth, being covered by the loose surface soil, will retain its humidity for a long time. Indeed, we rarely ever find it necessary to water again after planting in this way, and a little muck or litter placed around the tree upon the newly moved soil will render it quite unnecessary. Frequent surface watering is highly injurious, as it causes the top of the soil to bake so hard as to prevent the access of light and air, both of which, in a certain degree, are absolutely necessary.

4. Plant same depth that the tree grew in nursery.

5. If your soil is positively bad, remove it from the hole and substitute a cart load or two of good garden mould or similar rich soil and manure. Do not forget that plants must have food.

Do not plant in soils that stay wet during a large portion of the year. Trees will not grow in soils underlaid with pipe clay.
