

Gov. Craig Against the Greatest Navy For U. S.

"We should not be stampeded into the militarism responsible for this war. We should not strive to have the greatest navy of the world. Established methods and armaments become obsolete in the actualities of the conflict. When this war ceases the world will be sick of armies and navies.

"A just regard for the rights of nations and for humanity, our geographical position and our potential resources constitute our strength and our defense.

For heaven's sake that puts her trust trust

"In reeking tube and iron shard." "But now and always, no American right should be invaded and no American citizen should be struck wrongfully with impunity."

That was the telegram sent to the New York American Monday by Governor Locke Craig. It was in answer to a query of that paper, directed to him along with other executives of the nation. The question of the New York American came to Governor Craig in this form:

"Do you favor the maintenance of a navy powerful enough in battleships and in cruisers and in auxiliaries and in armament and in men to deter any enemies from attacking us, or victoriously to destroy them if they do attack us?"

How And When To Water Horses

A reader asks: "When should a horse be watered, before or after feeding?"

The best answer would probably be, "water both before and after feeding;" or water the horse when he is thirsty."

If a horse has not been deprived of water for too long a time he will probably not drink too much, but if he has been deprived of water for too long he may drink too much if he is hot and the water is cold.

Owing to the small size of the horse's stomach the theory has been generally proclaimed that he should be watered before feeding and not after. He should be watered before feeding if he is thirsty and after feeding also if he is thirsty.

Experimental tests seem to indicate that the great advantages attributed to watering before feeding or the assumed disadvantages of watering after feeding are largely theory. It makes little difference when the horse gets his water, just so long as he gets it often enough. Many horses will not drink before eating, but will drink afterward, and in such cases they should be watered after feeding.

In winter, twice a day, or at most three times a day, is often enough to give a horse water, unless he is working extremely hard and sweating very freely; in fact, watering and idling horse once a day in winter is more likely to supply his needs than three times a day in hot weather. In hot weather watering five times a day is not too often for farm work stock. The Progressive Farmer.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS

The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body. In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, tiredness, dreamful sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown. To correct nervousness, Scott's Emulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutriment gets into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve-cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. It is free from alcohol. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J.

The Harrow's The Tool To Use.

The one implement which will reduce the cost of cultivation by largely doing away with the necessity for the use of the hoe and deep culture implements, is the harrow. Nothing more forcibly illustrates the difficulty and slowness with which new methods can be introduced than the reluctance of the average Southern farmer to use the section harrow for early cultivation. For years a few used the harrow for the early cultivation of corn, and the best proof of its efficiency is the fact that these always continued its use after the first trial. It is probably true that every man first used the harrow for the early cultivation of his corn with much doubt and fear. But one trial dispelled all this, yet his neighbors were unconvinced and continued to use the hoe and the turning plow because they felt sure the harrow would not do for their special conditions. In fact, a still more remarkable illustration of the conservatism of the farmer is to be found in the reluctance with which those who for years had been using the harrow on their corn were induced to use it for the early cultivation of their cotton.

The harrow (and the weeder for the one-horse farmer on sandy land) is the one implement which makes early cultivation economical and effective. It is the one implement which will do most to do away with the use of the hoe, that most expensive of all tools used for cultivating a crop. It is also the one implement that will enable the farmer to "keep out of the grass" and avoid the use of the turning plow to "wrap up the grass," and avoid not only expensive but also injurious cultivation. The Progressive Farmer.
