SAM P. HEATH.

Take Care Of Too's.

Every farmer should have a tool shed where he can keep all tools and machines while they are not in use. An expensive shed is not necessary, the principal point being to have some shelter that will keep the implements dry.

Having finished using a machine for the season, put it under the shed and clean the dirt and rust from every part. Then apply a coat of paint. A good paint for all farm implements can be made with red lead and linseed oil. Painting machinery is one of the important methods of prolonging its period of usefulness.

Every machine should be inspected carefully at least once a year. When any part is found to be broken or missing, make a note of the part on a tag and fasten the tag to the machine. Then, when there is time to spare for ordering parts, there will be no danger of forgetting or overlooking anything that is needed.

The essentials of caring for farm implements are housing, repairing, oiling, cleaning and painting.—Clemson Bulletin.
