Telephone A Retail Business

A recent issue of "Telephone" calls attention to the fact that, while most other great industries carry on a wholesale business with the public, the telephone industry necessarily carries on a retail business.

There can be no such thing as wholesale production and distribution of telephone service. Each call is an exclusive service, demanding personal contact and the use of a circuit. Every customer must be served separately.

No matter how large the telephone industry may grow, or how extensive its equipment may become, its service must always be provided on a retail basis—an individual service, ready at any time for the use of any customer.
