

Stokes County Hunting Story

PROF. SMITH AND THE PATRICK RED

Without departing from the son's splendid record as head of the school of Stokes county...

Prof. Smith was disappointed for many years, including the years of World War I...

But Prof. Smith had one little weakness. He never liked to be hunted, and while he did not allow this to prevent him from hunting...

Now Prof. was a good Presbyterian, and always observed Sundays with something of that decorum which all good Presbyterians are supposed to have...

Now, just here it may be mentioned that at this time a Presbyterian revival was in session at Dan River church...

When the matter of the hunt began to be talked up...

The day had come when the trail had been laid out...

Now the keen hunting perspicacity of Prof. soon made it perfectly clear to him that that fox was an old Patrick county red...

Prof. no longer sat down on a log or rock, but he was up and traveling fast to keep at least in hearing distance of these dogs.

It was a beautiful race. The fox stayed on the north side of the mountain, but bearing north he was soon crossing the valleys in and about Black Island Ford...

But when the fox had reached the top of the mountain...

Prof. Smith was disappointed for many years, including the years of World War I...

Holy Moses! What would he do.

He pulled a whistle from his pocket and blew a blast as true as the stars were with old and true.

It was not about this time that the congregation at Dan River was singing Amazing Grace...

By now the congregation had begun to stampede, as Joe Hill had given out a big whoop...

"What an earth-whose does me these anyway?" the preacher demanded.

Before he could think what he was saying, Joe Hill started out...

"They are Tom Smith's dogs, Han's his name on this dog's eye."

"Why, I guess not," said the preacher. "Prof. Smith told me you belonged with cold and hot water."

"I suppose they must have got out," said Joe. "I'll have to help the boys up this time of it."

Next day he learned that the fox had been seen in the woods near U. W. College...

Next day he learned that the fox had been seen in the woods near U. W. College...

But Prof. never again let these dogs loose on Sunday morning.
