Land Bank to Make Loans on Farm Wood Lands, Forest Lands

The Federal Land Bank of Columbia has extended its loan facilities to include loans on farm woodlands and forest lands, according to notice received from Julian H. Scarborough, President of the bank, by Geo. L. Crater, Secretary-Treasurer of the Winston-Salem National Farm Loan Association, which handles Federal Land Bank Loans in this county.

The new timber plan is designed to serve all farmers who have timber land in excess of normal farm needs and are following sound forestry practices as well as those engaged in the growing of timber on large scales. "It is now generally recognized that farm woodlands constitute a substantial part of the value of farms in the South and the recognition of this value for loan purposes will enable the Bank to extend its long-term credit facilities to more farmers, Mr. Scarborough said.

Loans on forest lands will be based on the expected normal earnings of the tract under the management of a typical operator following sound forestry practices. Normal values and not current market values of growing and marketing timber will be used in determining loan values. A cruise of the timber will be required by a timber appraiser where all or a substantial part of the loan is based on timber land.

Loans will be made on both marketable pine and hardwood timber and selective cutting will be permitted under standard of forestry practices. The loan repayment plan will be made to fit the individual operator and loans will usually run from 10 to 40 years. Partial or full repayment will be permitted at any time.

"The Federal Land Bank of Columbia is pioneering in the making of loans on timber lands just as it pioneered in the making of long-term farm mortgage loans at low interest rates more than 25 years ago. We are glad to be able to offer a long-term, low interest rate loan on farm woodlands in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, which constitute one of the greatest assets of the South. The Bank's timber loan program has been worked out with the full cooperation and assistance of the United States and the State Forest Services," Mr. Scarborough stated.

"Applications for loans on farm woodlands and forest lands may be made at the office of the Winston-Salem National Farm Loan Association and will be handled just as applications for regular loans are handled," Secretary-Treasurer Geo. L. Crater said. The Association office is located in the Wachovia Bank Building, Trade Street Branch, at Winston-Salem, and further information can be obtained by writing or calling there. J. J. Booth lost a fine mule last week, worth $200.00.

Stokes County Hunting Story

TOM PETREE PULLS A PARTY

It was about the fifteenth of May last when Tom Petree decided to pull a party.

Mr. Petree, as is well known, is a hunter of fame, or rather to be more precise, a trapper. He catches many kinds of game, such as coons and possums, muskrats, some few wildcats, rabbits, eels and catfish.

Now, as you know, eels is a aristocratic dish. It has a peculiar flavor, one that of course must be cultivated. Many people adore eel. People who like the slick tang of bullfrog legs, the squish of chitterlings and the grease of possum, just adore eel.

So Mr. Petree invited a group of his best friends to an eel supper at the cafe. He sent invitations in that inscrutable hieroglyphic of his to Alex Southern, Vess Christian, Matt Simmons, Dr. Moorefield, Mick East, Huse Loftis, An Joyce, Ernest Nelson, Nume Knight and Hobe Bennett.

The occasion was very auspicious. The full moon was riding the sky that giggling night. The whispering winds from South Carolina breathed on the willows of the Dan. The fireflies flickered. The gnats swarmed. The bullfrogs bellowed.

Tom started out little before dark with Alex Booth, his boon companion on these hunts, to bring in the eel. He had a gig, and Alex carried the sack to put the game in.

Have you ever been giggling? You take a flashlight, and the pronged harpoon. That's all you have. You roll up your britches. It's magnificent sport. To stalk up and down the creek, under the low hanging bushes and spiders, and when you see a thing moving in the stream, you harpoon it.

Tom had almost filled the sack that Alex was toting with bullfrogs, tad poles and catfish before he saw a big eel swimming atop the water, and with one fell stroke he impaled this choicest of all viands for the discriminative connoisseurs. He was ready to go back, having attained the much desired meat. Alex shouldered the sack and they went back, Tom troling a beautiful song he had learned from the radio.

By this time Miss Ola had the banquet table in the cafe dining room ready for the feast—all but the central dish of aristocratic eel.

Red, white and blue festoons reached from the electric light bulbs to the linen on the table, place cards were at each seat, pickles in the dishes, toothpicks in the glass receptacles, and at each plate a bottle of Budweiser foaming to get out.

The guests waited. In the backyard the host had arrived, and sat his gig down against the fence with a sign of pleasurable fatigue, and asking for Reed Flinchum to come out and help skin the eel.

It had been very dark, but now an electric bulb showered bright white light on the proceedings.

Just as Tom drew out the prize ment from the sack, Alex exclaimed in a very loud voice:

"Tom, that ain't no eel. That's a damn snake."

Mr. Petree affixed his glasses, and gasped:

"Well, by Jingo, if I ain't giggled a water moccasin!"

The host came into the dining room, with a long face.

"Gentlemen," he said disconsolately, "I'm sorry, but due to unforeseen circumstances, the party's been postponed till a later date."

Each gentleman guest drained his Budweiser to the dregs, got up and departed.
