WISE WORDS.

Discontent is the echo of unbelief. Will without wisdom is salt without meat. Every day is full of a most impressive experience.

To be dexterous in danger is a virtue; but to court danger to show it is weakness. We never practice a greater cheat on ourselves than when we wish to be thought humble.

Our grand business is not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand. If we would build a firm wall we must not hurry it too fast; we must go gradually, and allow the cement time to dry.

Feeling that it is impracticable in themselves; and it is for want of application, rather than of means, that men fall of success. In all negotiations of difficulty a man may not look to win and reap at once, but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

No true man can live a half life when he has genuinely learned that it is only a half life. The other half, the highest half, must haunt him. What is there in the world to distinguish virtue from dishonor, or that can make anything rewardable, but the labor and the danger, the pain and the difficulty?

There is no action of man in this life which is not the beginning of so long a chain of consequences, that no human providence is high enough to give us a prospect to the end. The Frugal Greeks.

The Greeks are the most frugal and temperate people of Europe. Gluttony and drunkenness are rare vices among them. Their diet is such as it was two thousand years ago. They eat little meat; barley bread, goats' cheese, or black dried olives and wine make up a beneficial diet.

There are many varieties of Greek wine, and each is famous for its medicinal properties. Our agoutis munched raw beans with evident relish as his luncheon. Maize is cultivated in some parts of the country, and is imported from Italy; but I never saw it used by the Greeks.

A large number of herbs are boiled as "g cens," and used in salads. Salt fish is used in some districts. Salt is a government monopoly and is very brown. Olive oil serves as butter, cream, lard and suet. The food is generally too oily for an American. Honey is often used in ancient times instead of sugar. Sweet milk is little used, but many preparations of curds are common: curds and sugar are made into a toothsome dish.

AMONG THE MINGRELIANS

HABITS OF THE MOUNTAINERS OF THE WESTERN CAUCASUS. Their Elaborate Salutations, Odd Table Etiquette and Peculiar Judicial Proceedings.

In the highland regions of the western Caucasus the manners of the Crustian mountain folk are pretty much what they were a quarter of a century ago when the Russians first came into the country. A Mingrelian "How do you do?" of the genuine old fashioned kind, is still an elaborate performance that takes no account of time. As in Palestine and elsewhere, Grusinian etiquette requires that salutations shall be exchanged as soon as the parties meeting come within sight of each other, and to leave out the most trivial inquiries relating to the insignificant member of another's household is accounted extremely bad form, so that a couple of silk-shirted Mingrelian elders—they are particularly fond of silk garments, which they wear without changing until they drop to pieces—will begin a series of bows and bendings which last a mile from each other and continue them with a running fire of exclamations until they come within hailing distance. Then the inquiries commence: "How is your health?" and "How have you been?" "How is your mother, your wife and your nurse?" (nurses are very important personages in all Mingrelian households). "How is your overseer and your yardmaster and herdsman?" is a most favorite horse well, and are your cattle and sheep in good health?" and so on in regular di- minuendo, ending with the meanest maid servant or scullion of the person addressed, if the latter be a man of standing or position, and not forgetting even "his honors dog." When the principals have finished, their attendants proceed as despatched to exchange similar compliments. Time is of no consequence.

The Mingrelians, like the Ossetes of the mountains, have the extraordinary custom of going bareheaded one day in the week—on Saturday, that is, or as they term it, the "habat." This they do in honor of the Sabbath, though they make no other distinction between it and any other day of the week, working and living as usual. But, wet or dry, rain or snow, none ever go abroad on Saturday save with uncovered head.

The Mingrelians, like nearly all the Caucasian mountaineers, eat much and eat greedily. Their table etiquette is peculiar. Portions are allotted according to age and position—according to age in the house and at family gatherings, and according to station at public feasts, to which these people are much addicted. At home the huge iron pot in which the food is cooked is placed by the side of the house-father; for several married sons often reside in one dwelling and a large bone out of the kettle, grasps the bone in the right and the left hand, and, turning it round, south, calls upon "Irasabelli tshidawita bidis"—the "mountain gods and the holy ones who dwell there"—to have mercy upon those who cry to them. Then messes are sent round to each, beginning with the oldest male; and when these portions are eaten there is a general scramble for the meat in the hand, and, turning it round, south, calls upon "Irasabelli tshidawita bidis"—the "mountain gods and the holy ones who dwell there"—to have mercy upon those who cry to them. Cunning Diamond Thieves.

The native laborer in the diamond fields, says an African correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, at the present time, through contaminating influences, has become an adept, and will steal with an adroitness which almost defies detection. He uses his nose, mouth, stomach, ears, and hair to detect the diamonds that he steals and, unless restricted to the compound, walks about at nightfall from the mine or from the sorting table with an air of abandon which would "deceive the very elect," the diamond being all the while on his person. Again, if working on the depositing floors, where the blue ground which contains the diamonds is exposed to the action of the atmosphere, a diamond should happen to be turned up which could be seen at a glance was too large or which there was no opportunity to secrete, the wily savage would cover it up unobtrusively, but at the same time would arrange the lumps of "blue" around in such a manner that when night came and he returned, he could easily find the spot and secure the precious stone for himself.

Sometimes in mines where they were working deep another dodge would be resorted to. Suddenly, at a given signal the whole gang working in one of the claims would yell out and jump as if the reef surrounding were falling. The overseer in charge would instinctively look up, while the boy who had given the false alarm would coolly stoop down and pocket some large diamond which he had just unearthed.

Many a beautiful diamond, too, has frequently been recovered from a native's pipe, which was diligently being puffed with all the air of innocence, and I have even heard of goats feeding near the floor set apart for the depositing of "blue stuff," being turned into accorderios (after the fact) the hair of these animals affording a hiding place for stolen diamonds, which were thus carried to the "veldt" beyond and thus reformed by the thief this day's work being over) without any danger whatever of discovery.

Generally speaking, the system of searching the natives is as follows: On arrival at the searching house they are compelled to divest themselves of their ordinary garb and pass through a central compartment after which they assume working suits, needless to say, absolutely pocketless. Their work over, they are first searched in the claims by the overseers and then are examined by the searching officer. They are stripped of all articles of clothing, their hair, and their hair, mouths, ears, etc., carefully examined. Few diamonds, however, have ever been found in the searching houses, but of course, the search acts as a preventive against dishonesty.

Don't Kill the Old Heens. When hens are shedding feathers they tend to stop laying and grow fat. Most people consider fat a sign of health. The fattening of moulted hens, however, with some exceptions, is a liability rather than a benefit. Many of the worst cases of roup are contracted while the hen is molting. The food of molting hens should not be largely vegetable in character, and not too rich in growing feathers. Therefore corn fed hens get very fat. They need more nitrogen and phosphorus in their food when molting, which if not supplied they stop laying. Because the growing feathers have used all, and left no nitrogenous matter to form eggs. As a result, the eggs will hatch a few, and the rest will be a mass of undeveloped embryos. John R. Jones, Suffolk, Conn., a breeder of prize winning molting Javans, says: "I find Sheridan's Food, fed once daily in the food, very valuable for molting hens. I have used it two years for exhibition birds. It assists in growing new feathers, gives a bright red comb and gives a rich gloss to the plumage. It will also make hens lay and the eggs hatch well. I find when the other egg-foods are used in quantities to any extent, the eggs do not hatch."

The above is the experience of many people in using Sheridan's Food. If fed to young birds, it will begin to lay before six months old. Commence at once using Sheridan's Food. It helps old hens through molting, and gets the pullets into the laying season at high prices. Eggs will sell very high this fall and winter. Therefore be ready to get you some.

A Large Estate. A broad land is in this estate which we have dotted so thickly with thrifty cities, towns and villages. Avoid them all, with ever increasing popularity, our "Golden Discovery" giving hope and cheer where there is disease and despair. Wherever there is humanity there is suffering, and where there is suffering there is the best field for this grand American Remedy. Consumption (which is lung scrofula) yields to it, if employed in the early stages of the disease. Chronic Nasal Catarrh, yields to it. Kidney and Liver troubles yield to it. If you are not the best known remedy for all diseases of the blood, ask for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and take no other.

Why Don't

Woman (to tramp) "Can't ye get any work to do?" Tramp—"Yes, ma'am; I was offered a steady job by the old agricultural expert who lives just beyond the forks of the road."

Woman—"That's Mr. Hayslett. What did he want you to do?" Tramp—"Ma'am, he wanted me to get up at four in the morning and milk seventeen cows, feed water and rub down four horses, clean the stables, and then saw wood until it was time to begin the day's work."

Woman—"How much did he want to pay ye?" Tramp—"I dunno; I didn't stop to ask."
