As to the methods of raising money for road building purposes, there are two systems which have been employed in different parts of the country. both with considerable success. One plan may be called the "pay as you go" system. Under this plan a small annual tax is levied, the proceeds of which may be used partly for the purchase of equipment and partly for actual work on the roads. This tax may be increased slightly at intervals, but the next generation gets the benefit of them. Under the bond issue policy both the present and the future generations receive the benefits and both help to pay for them. It may be argued that the system of borrowing money for road building is more expensive for the reason that the money borrowed must be paid back as well as the interest thereon, which at 5 per cent in twenty years will amount to as much as the principal, and there fore for each dollar borrowed two will have to be paid back at the end of twenty years. This is not strictly true. however. The money will be borrowed as needed. Furthermore, a few thou sand dollars placed in the bank at compound interest is sufficient for a sinking fund.

The above objection would in a measure apply to any similar transaction in the business world, and yet today

90 per cent of all the business of the civilized world is done on a credit basis. If nations, states, countles and in dividuals had listened to this argu ment this country of ours would today be almost as little known and as little developed as the continent of Africa. When a community is building public roads for the use of its people all of the money borrowed for this purpose is placed in circulation among the people. They use it in their business transactions; they make it earn an interest often worth far more to them than the interest which the county pays for the sum. In other words, the county has the roads and the money which has been spent upon them.

The whole structure of our indus trial and governmental fabric rests upon the mechanism of credit. The amount of legal tender actually in circulation in the United States in 1910 was only $34.52 per capita and would be pitifully inadequate to meet the and digested by the people of the maries en masse on May 18, and demands of business if all transactions State.

WORKING OUT THE TAX.

it continues to be paid as an annual tax, the proceeds of which are annually expended for road building purposes. This system has certain advantages, for example, in connection with this expenditure of the annual tax. While only a limited amount of work can be done each year, there is no opportunity for wasting large sums The people of the county gradually adapt themselves to the changed conditions, and the persons placed in charge of the road work have an opportunity of becoming efficient by their own experience before they come to handle larger sums of money, and another thing which has considerable weight with a large class of people is that the county is kept out of debt. Another advantage of this system is that when a county has a large taxable wealth a small annual levy will yield as large a sum as can be wisely expended.

The more enlightened and the more commercial a people are the larger is the application of the credit system in their business. In the early settle ment of this country the money for development and business enterprises was borrowed from Europe. Grad ually the eastern states increased in wealth to such an extent that they not only paid their European debts. but had money to loan for the up building of their sister states in the west. At the present time some of the western states are joining with those in the east in lending money to Europe. During the past 100 years on the system of "going into debt for public improvements" this country has risen from a small dependent nation to the head of the list.

The disadvantages of the "pay as you go" system are that the work of road building proceeds too slowly. In a county which has 500 miles of road. 100 miles of which should be considered its main thoroughfares, if it raises a tax sufficient to build five BUILDING ROADS UNDER A CASE SYSTEM miles of good road each year twenty years will be required to improve the 100 miles, and many of the citizens taxes for years before they would re- 1911: ceive any benefit therefrom.

The system of raising money for road building by issuing bonds is generally unpopular, because people dread the idea of debt.

The great advantage in the system of borrowing money for road building is that by securing the larger sums of money for immediate expenditure the work can be pushed more rapidly, and the roads which would otherwise require twenty or thirty years for their people of the county begin to receive and the benefits are sufficiently great can be raised by taxation or issue the annual taxes in advance of the completion of the road.

An the country property alone bears the examination of the ballots cast entire cost of road building. A bond issue is not an unjust burden on posterity, because through the increase in the value of land and the development of agricultural resources posterity is benefited. Therefore the son who inherits the wealth thus produced by the preceding generation should certainly help to pay the cost of the factors which are instrumental in bringing about this wealth.

The increase in farm values as the result of road improvement is so great that the tax rate is frequently lower than before the issuance of bonds. To substantiate this point the following
