

EVER SALIVATED BY CALOMEL? HORRIBLE!

Calomel is quicksilver and acts like dynamite on your liver.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It erases into sour bile like dynamite, erasing and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

French See Final War Act In Arming of Merchantmen.

Paris, March 13.—The decision of the United States to cannonade German submarines is the final act and practical conclusion of the notes of May, 1916, says the Temps. "It is a fact without doubt that the arming of merchantmen and the perfectly natural instructions they have received forecast the probable opening soon of hostilities.

"Germany is the witness of its action in having with its own hands destroyed in the United States the strongest situation ever possessed by any European country. The moral effect for the entente is considerable, as it is the reinforcement of the surveillance of the seas."

How About Your Teeth?

Medical science in the last few years has come into possession of far greater knowledge about the teeth than it ever possessed before. It has learned that conditions of the mouth affect the welfare and the health of the entire body.

Food, water and air are essential to life. These three things pass through the mouth and the nasal passages. If, on entering the human body, at the very threshold, they pass through an infected orifice where disease germs abound, it is not to be wondered at if they, in turn, become infected and carry disease throughout the system.

The mouth, it has been said, is the portal of the life of the whole body. Equally it is true that the teeth are the guardians who stand by the portal. In days long since gone by, primitive man, says an eminent medical authority, used to fight for his life with his teeth.

Today, no less than in that era before the dawn of civilization, the life of modern man depends upon his teeth. By the teeth a man keeps, this authority has added, is a man known. A few weeks ago, the president of a great western railroad system boarded his private car and traveled across the continent to consult a famous medical specialist.

The man was sick. He had lost weight; he had no appetite; what little he did manage to eat disagreed with him. He was nervous, irritable; he could not bring the full powers of his mind to bear on his work.

Whip his flagging energies as he would, they failed to respond to his command. So the president of the great railroad journeyed East to the specialist.

When the consultation was ended the physician handed him a piece of paper. "Here," he said, "is a prescription. Read it."

"If I should read it," he replied, "I'd be none the wiser."

"Oh, yes," the doctor answered. "It is written in plain English. You will understand what it says."

The patient unfolded the slip of paper. "Consult a dentist," he read.

"Why," he stammered, "I don't—I don't understand."

"Bad teeth," explained the great specialist, "are at the root of your ailment."

"But," protested the railroad president, "I've not had a touch of toothache in ten years."

"And yet," answered the doctor, for ten years your teeth have been crying for a dentist. Today, poisons from your mouth, germs from infected areas beneath your teeth, more germs from cavities between them and still more germs from teeth which, though still sound, are dirty, are going into your stomach with every mouthful of food you partake and with every drink of water you swallow.

Flooding your stomach with medicine might afford you temporary relief, but you will never recover your health, nor your old-time vigor, until your mouth, your gums, your teeth are first restored to a healthy condition."

And that, as subsequent events proved, was a fact. The patient needed a dentist, not a doctor.

A physician of national reputation died not long ago of heart disease. When an autopsy was held, it was discovered that the physician died not so much from heart disease as from a diseased tooth. It was the latter that had caused the former. Pus from the infected area about the diseased tooth had been carried by the blood back to the heart and there had produced a heart lesion. A neglected tooth was the primary cause of the man's death.

An Army, Napoleon frequently remarked, travels on its stomach. So it does, and fights on it. But it carries its toothbrush with it also. When the Japanese army was hurling back the Russians in Manchuria, back of the lines, with supplies of ammunition and food, was wagon after wagon loaded full with toothbrushes. Today, in the trenches of Europe, the soldier's kit is not complete without its toothbrush.

"How often," asked a woman of her dentist, "should I clean my teeth?"

"How often," he asked her, "do you clean your cooking utensils and wash your dishes?"

"As often as I use them," she replied.

"Well," said the dentist, "just as often should you clean your teeth."

Brushing the teeth is inconvenient, or, rising late in the morning there is not time for it. But it cannot be said too emphatically that it would be far better, to neglect to wash the face or the hands than to neglect to clean the teeth. Germs, it must be remembered find their speediest development in the mouth.

A good toothbrush, taken in conjunction with a good dentifrice, used at least twice daily is as good an aid to sound health, good digestion and long life as any other single thing the doctor can prescribe. But even faithful use of the toothbrush is not sufficient. Every man, woman and child in the country—in cities, towns, hamlets, in the rural districts—should go at least twice a year to a competent dentist to have him perform any work that six months of constant use of the teeth may have made necessary. Remember the important fact, that a healthy body and unclean teeth are a really impossible combination.

Between the Trenches.

Sapping deeper, the French engineers had countermined their foes, and very early in the morning, with a thunderous explosion, they blew up the German position. Many Germans were killed, but some escaped and ran for their nearest trench. The French leaped their embankment and dashed forward to occupy the crater that the explosion had made; but the enemy's fire drove them back. So, now, French and Germans faced one another not thirty yards apart, with the demolished trench between them, neither army able to occupy it.

None dared show his head above the trench, for sharpshooters watched with keen eyes and ready rifles from the opposite positions. A great silence reigned, broken only by the agonizing cries of the wounded who were unable to crawl back to their lines.

Gradually the cries of these unfortunates ceased, all except one, whose piteous wails filled the air: "Hilfe! Hilfe! Um Gottes willen!" he repeated over and over again. But none dared go to him.

The hot sun shone down mercilessly upon the half-buried, suffering man. He was severely wounded and pinioned beneath the fallen timbers of the trench. It appeared he must die a slow and agonizing death, with help so near, yet so far; with power so close to him, yet so impotent.

"Help! Help! For God's sake, help me!" he kept groaning.

His voice became weaker and weaker. "Water! Water—oh, give me water!" he moaned. But none dared to help him.

Suddenly, with utter disregard of the danger, a tall, slim, young French captain leaped to the top of his trench. A shot sang by him instantly, but he fearlessly held aloft his hand to command attention. Then he shouted to the imprisoned German, "Tell your comrades to come and fetch you! We will not fire. We give our word." He jumped down inside again.

The wounded man heard. Summoning his last remaining strength he raised his voice and cried the message aloud to his comrades.

There was a short conference inside the German trench. Then four tall soldiers in the uniform of the Prussian Guard climbed over their parapet and advanced boldly into the open, carrying a stretcher. They faced a hundred rifle barrels, but there was no shot. The word of honor had been passed, and men were acting as human beings, saving instead of destroying.

Quickly the Germans reached their comrade. A heavy beam of the demolished trench had fallen upon him and crushed both legs. Working with a will, they soon had him released, and placing him on the stretcher, they bore him away to the safety of their trench.

A moment later some sixty Prussian helmets were hoisted enthusiastically on rifles above the trench, and in a mighty chorus there came the shout, "Thank you, comrades, thank you."

The French captain climbed upon the trench, bowed courteously, and responded, "It was our pleasure, comrades. Now to our duty again."

And pitiless war reigned once more between the lines.

TWO LINERS IN WITH SUBMARINE FINDING DEVICES.

Smoke Funnels of Baltic and Carmania Also Protect the Ships.

New York, N. Y.—Both the White Star liner Baltic and the Cunarder Carmania, which have just reached this port from Europe, are equipped with the new smoke screen and electrical submarine detecting devices.

The smoke funnels, it is said, throw a screen for a radius of at least two miles around the ship, hiding it completely from enemy submarines.

The electrical submarine detector was first brought out by a Frenchman two years ago, and is proving very effective. The Carmania was the first ship to arrive here so equipped. Other large ships, it is believed, have these two devices.
