BRIGHTER DAYS SEEN FOR RUSSIA

Prospect Good Says Alexander V. Behr for Establishment of a Lasting Democratic Form of Government.

New York, N. Y.—"It was a distinct surprise to me on my arrival in this country to realize that in many ways the American public has failed to have a proper understanding of the situation in Russia," said Alexander V. Behr, vice-president of the Russian-American Chamber of Commerce in New York. He has just arrived and in expressing his views on the Russian situation, according to a statement issued by the Russian-American Chamber of Commerce, said:

"The situation in Russia is a very serious one. The difficulties which have been and are being encountered are great, and the gravity of the situation must not be underestimated, but no one who is thoroughly familiar with the Russian people and with present conditions in Russia can doubt for a moment that out of the present difficulties there is slowly emerging a stronger, greater and finer Russia which will establish a stable and democratic form of government, capable not only of solving the difficult problems that now confront us, but also of developing a constructive program for the reorganization and reconstruction of Russia's political, industrial and commercial life.

"During the last few months, and especially during the last six weeks, there has been a steady growth in the desire on the part of all classes in Russia to develop a governmental machinery which will bring about greater stability, greater order, and which will have a direct control of the developments in Russia.

"The Moscow conference represents another stage in the development of this feeling and it is remarkable that today Kerensky, Korniloff and the other leaders of the Russian Revolution are openly advocating the strictest discipline in the establishment of order and the most extreme steps for establishing direct control both in the army and in the Government. When I left Russia six weeks ago it would have been impossible to advocate and secure such direct control and the enforcement of such orders. It is, however, evident that little by little the Russian people, in whom we all have the greatest faith, are realizing the form of governmental machinery which will be able to direct and guide the future development of Russia's political and economic life.

"The tremendous upheaval caused by the Russian Revolution created a situation of great confusion—a situation in which there were numerous factions and many contradictory points of view, but beneath the surface of all this disorder there has been a steady undercurrent which has moved toward the bringing about of a stable and permanent order. Each of the different stages which has marked the development of public opinion is evidence of the growing strength of this feeling, and it has now found explanation in the great conference at Moscow. All the dangers are by no means passed. Serious difficulties and grave problems still confront us, but there is no question that we are making progress and that our progress lies along lines which will place us in a position fully to develop and utilize the potential possibilities which our people and our country possess.

"Russia believes in the United States and desires the assistance and cooperation of this country. I feel sure the American people have complete faith in Russia, but it is most important at the present time that the American public should draw its conclusions in regard to Russian affairs on the basis of accurate information furnished to them either through authoritative Russian sources or from observers who have had an opportunity of seeing at the first hand conditions in Russia and of analyzing the character of the Russian people, for there are many sources of information in regard to Russia which would be glad to take advantage of the present situation for alienating the latest sympathies and friendship which are so rapidly developing between Russia and the United States. I am convinced that a greater and stronger Russia will appear. A Russia which cannot be compared with the Russia of any previous period but between today and that time is tomorrow. Just what this will bring us is hard to say; also how long it will last. We may go through even harder and more difficult times, but this must not and cannot change the great absolute faith in the future."

IRON FINE FOR BLEEDING GUMS.

If Troubled with Sore, Bleeding Gums, use This Mouth Wash The Dentist Uses. Good For Cuts and old Sores

Any person troubled with sore, bleeding gums, which oftentimes are almost too sensitive to touch, will be elated after rinsing the mouth with a half-and-half solution of water and natural iron, known as "Acid Iron Mineral" which may be secured at most every drug store.

Dentists use it to stop bleeding and as a mouthwash when extracting teeth and it is perfectly harmless. It acts as a germicide and antiseptic as well as a splendid healing agent.

For cuts, this same natural iron is fine. Pouring a little on the spot stops bleeding and prevents soreness and festering. Thousands of people troubled with old sores never healing have found the solution in Acid Iron Mineral, which being a highly concentrated form of natural iron makes a superb external remedy.

Go to the nearest drug store and ask for a bottle of Acid Iron Mineral. If druggist hasn't it, send $1. to the Ferrrodine Chemical Corp., Roanoke, Va., for a large bottle.

Note: For piles, ulcers, sores and skin affections, the Ferrrodine Chemical Corp. has perfected an ointment consisting of this highly concentrated natural iron and soothing medicinal elements, which combined makes this ointment unexcelled. Ask your druggist for a fifty cent jar of A-I-M Ointment or send direct.
