Farmers should make every preparation to sow all the COW PEAS possible after harvesting grain crops this year, so as to increase the fertility and productivity of their lands for crops to follow.

The Sowing of Cow Peas at the Last Working of Corn

It is also to be strongly recommended. Farmers who have practiced this claim that the sowing of Cow Peas increases the yield of corn, and at the same time it makes a most desirable soil-improving or forage crop.

Worried About Germany's

Losses to American Soldiers

In crushing out the of Germanism in the United States the Volkzeitung, a newspaper of Cologne Germany sees a disaster in a measure balancing the Teutonic military successes. An official dispatch from France commenting on pessimistic discussion in the German press of events in the United States, quotes the Volkzeitung as follows:

"Mr. Wilson hopes to succeed in crushing the German elements. He will succeed. The German press is already nearly crushed out of existence in America. The greater part of the German schools are closed. The German associations are required to strip themselves of all vestiges of Germany. It is a complete debacle.

"It is unnecessary to be pessimistic to realize that the consequence of our European victories are in a measure balanced by the sum total of the losses we have suffered in America. All this could have been a foreseen.

"After the war Germans will no longer be able to enter America. The Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd lines are entering in the black book. Shipbuilding yards and offices have been sold with the prohibition of revelling to Germany after the war. The American press speaks of forbidding Germans to buy shipbuilding yards. It will be the end of German trans-Atlantic commerce.

"Besides these maritime forces, German estates representing millions of dollars, stocks of copper, nickel, cotton, leather and chemical products have been seized and utilized to fabricate American war material."

German Papers are Full #### of Boastful U-Boat Talk

Washington, June 17.—Boasting and threatening comment of the German newspapers on the appearance of submarines off the American coast is summarized in a statement issued today by the state department. One paper, not named in the summary, declared the present raids were but the beginning and added:

"There will be no bones in the United States that will make the marrow in Wilson's bones run cold."

Another said:

"The Americans are already trembling in fear of German air attacks, and the time may not be far distant when American ports will be bombarded."

Referring to the "submarine obstructions to transportation of American troops to France," the German editors added is quoted the character of vessels attacked by the submarines, the fact that the movement of troop convoys has not been interrupted with in the slightest degree by the U-boats.

When the War is Over.

Indianapolis News.

This world is going to be a beautiful place in which to live if all the visions currently conjured up with the phrase "when the war is over" are realized. The few words give solace and hope to millions. "When the war is over" food will be cheaper, and clothes, and everything else that man uses. All our troubles are going to be over with after the war, all our dreams realized. So goes the popular notion. Our desire to have it over with is understandable. No nation is naturally fonder of peace. War was thrust upon us by brutal aggression of an insane power. There was nothing to do but accept the challenge, and there is no regret or faltering now but peace is the natural estate of America and will always be looked forward to even in the heat of war. There is no danger that this feeling will result in peace before the time is ripe. All know now that the price of peace worthy of the name is the defeat of Germany. The nation that went into the war with eyes open and a full understanding of the sacrifices demanded will not be turned aside until the end is reached no matter how alluring the prospect, "when the war is over."

Home and Community Drying

of Fruits and Vegetables

By C. D. Matthews, Assistant Horticulturist.

The preservation of surplus fruits and vegetables by drying should become an important part of our thrift program. Drying is not a panacea for the entire waste evil, nor should it replace the storing or canning of fruits and vegetables in the home, but should be used to supplement these two agencies of conservation. When canning is not feasible or tin and glass containers are not expensive or are not obtainable, drying affords a practical means of saving the surplus products that otherwise would be wasted. This year added emphasis is given to drying because of the shortage and price of can suitable for canning. In normal times, large quantities of vegetables are wasted because of the lack of markets, poor transportation facilities, or because of no means of utilization. This waste could well be minimized by the use of drying.

There is a greater need for food thrift and conservation this season than ever before. We are confronted with the surplus perishable produce from the largest number of home gardens that have ever been planted. In most sections, prospects are excellent for a large fruit crop. With the continued increasing shortage of labor for production and the growing demand for food supplies, it is of the greatest importance, and is in fact a patriotic duty, to extend every energy in the conservation of surplus products.

One of the most prominent features of the food conservation program in Europe has been the universal drying of fruits and vegetables. With good reason, the world has wondered much during the past few years how Germany has been able to feed her people in spite of the blockade maintained by the Allies. A large part of this self-sufficiency has been due to the wide use of drying methods to preserve fruits, vegetables and grains that might otherwise have been spoiled through deterioration or decay. The surplus produce in the city markets have been forced by the government into large municipal drying plants. Community driers have been established in the trucking sections. Germany had at the beginning of the war about 430 drying plants in operation; now it is estimated that this number has been increased to over 2,000.

Principles of Drying

All fruits and vegetables contain a percentage of water, the value of which is in proportion to its volume. Spoiling or decomposition is due to the action of bacteria in the presence of this moisture. If the moisture can be removed from the fruits and vegetables without injuring the palatability and reducing the food value, the solution of the problem of preserving fruits and vegetables has been satisfactorily worked out. This result is obtained where drying is properly done.

The idea to be attained in drying consists in the preservation of the material with the smallest possible chance for the fresh state as regards quality, flavor, aroma, and food value. Where the operation was properly handled, water only has been removed.

While home drying is not as economical and as efficient as when done on a community basis, it saves food that would go to waste, and should not be neglected when a community drier is not available.

Where drying can be done on the community plan, it is much more advisable because the labor is less and the results better than when done at home. Where possible, special efforts should be made to organize communities for the installation and operation of community drying plants.

The Economy and Efficiency of Drying

The reduction in weight and bulk is one of the greatest advantages of drying. The weight may be reduced to from one-seventh to one-fifteenth of that of the fresh material, according to the amount of moisture extracted and inedible waste removed. The bulk is reduced from 60 per cent to 80 per cent.

Dried products effect a great saving in containers as they require fewer jars, cans, or other containers than do canned fruits and vegetables. Containers not suitable for canning, such as pastboard boxes and paper bags, may be utilized.

An extremely important feature of drying consists in the ability to utilize material that otherwise is not ready marketable. Undersized vegetables cannot be marketed directly and are often wasted. If, however, undersized vegetables are properly dried and prepared, they are just as valuable as the larger ones, for they are put in such form that the difference in size is not of importance.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture and the U. S. Food Administration are the authorities for the statement that dried products are equal to the tanned.

Practically all fruits and vegetables may be dried, though with only ordinary attention some vegetables furnish a better product than others. The operation of drying is very simple and the cost slight.

All inquiries regarding the necessary equipment for drying, and the methods employed should be addressed to C. D. Matthews, Assistant Horticulturist, N. C. Extension Service, Raleigh, N. C.

Men Who Refuse to Fight Are Given Long Sentences

Washington, June 17.—In approving today sentences ranging from 18 months to 20 years' imprisonment imposed by court-martial upon 12 privates who refused military service at Camps Upton, N. Y., and Gordon, Ga., Secretary Baker made it plain that the war department does not consider these men as coming within the class of conscientious objectors.

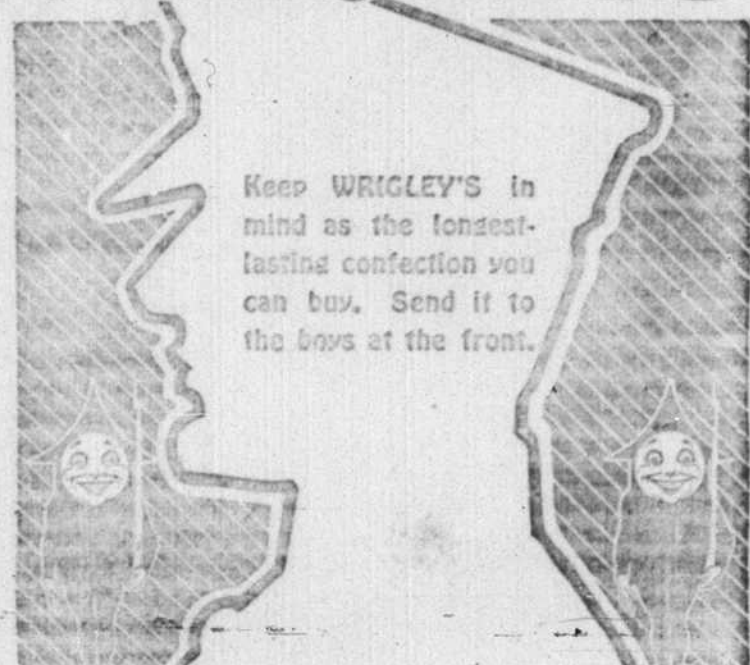

The men refused service solely because they were asked to fight against Germany and Austria, in which countries most of them claimed to have relatives. Since they are not regarded as conscientious objectors they will not have the right of a review of their cases by the special board appointed to hear appeals of such objectors.
