Meets Death at Hands of Grandson

The News last week carried an account of the death of S. J. Greenwood at his home near Chase City, Va. The remains were brought to Roaring River, Wilkes county, his old home and buried. On their arrival those accompanying the remains brought the information concerning his death, which was caused by a blow upon his head given him by his grandson, Robert Flemming.

Some weeks prior to his death Mr. Greenwood advertised for a renter who would live in his house with him, his wife being dead and he having two small children to care for. His grandson, Robt. Flemming, at once made arrangements to live with him and he and his wife moved in. It seems that Flemming had developed into a drinking man and he had not been there long before he began giving his grandfather trouble. Matters grew worse until the relations between them lead to a quarrel one afternoon. It is said that Flemming was drinking and when Mr. Greenwood went to his room he followed him, but the door was fastened and Flemming could not gain entrance. He then secured a heavy iron poker and after gaining entrance to his grandfather's room struck him over the forehead. Mr. Greenwood then ran out into the yard followed by Flemming. While in the yard the old man tried to defend himself with his knife, cutting Flemming across the abdomen. Mr. Greenwood then walked a quarter of a mile to the home of his father-in-law, relating his trouble and dropped dead before anyone realized he was seriously injured. An autopsy revealed that his skull had been crushed with the blow from the iron poker.

Flemming is in the hospital recovering from his wound and will be placed in jail to await a hearing as soon as his condition improves sufficiently. Flemming's wife is out on bond and is charged with aiding her husband in the attack on Mr. Greenwood. Mrs. F. D. Holcomb, of this city a sister of the deceased, attended the funeral and went from there to Chase City to visit the small children of her brother.
