A Correction

In last week's issue of The News we chronicled the visitors at Salvation Army headquarters stating that Mrs. Miles and children of Durham, and little Miss Doris Seal of New York were spending the holidays here.

By dropping out the conjunction "and" our linotype operator made the local to read "Capt. Seal her mother" instead of Capt. Seal and her mother. Mrs. Miles is a sister of Capt. Seal and little Doris is their niece, her parents being in training in New York.

Saltville, Flood Scene, Historic Point in South

Richmond, Dec. 26.—Saltville, the scene of Christmas eve's flood disaster, though little known to the world outside its Blue Ridge mountain walls has played an important and peculiar part in the history of the entire nation and especially in that of the south.

It was Saltville that gave the armies of the Confederacy their chief salt supply when that commodity was at a premium in the blockaded south. During the war of the revolution, salt from the Holston valley made the scanty rations of General William Campbell's colonial more palatable.

In the markets of the south during a long period from the discovery of the salt deposits in 1748 to a comparatively recent date, salt from the town, which drew its name from its chief industry, was sold.

First known to history as the "salt-lick" hunting grounds of the Indians, the valley in which Saltville is situated was explored by a party of Virginia colonists, to one of whom, Charles Campbell, King George II, of England, made a grant of the revolu-

TINY BABY KANGAROO IN POUCH SIX MONTHS

(From the Cleveland Plain Dealer)

Through close observation at the New York Zoo much has been learned about the kangaroo's birth, which has remained somewhat of a puzzle to zoologists until recent years. The young are born in a comparatively rudimentary condition, and are sheltered during their later development in a pouch, which is a fold of skin on the abdomen of the mother.

A kangaroo at birth weighs about twenty grains, is only a trifle more than an inch long, and not much thicker around than a lead pencil. It is a tiny, pinkish, naked mass, and with the exception of the perfectly formed front legs, bears but little resemblance to the adult kangaroo.

It is by no means of these front legs that it finally succeeds in propelling itself to the pouch, where in under goes its more mature development, and where it remains attached to its mother's udder for several months. It is completely developed and ready to leave the pouch after six months when it is permitted to shift for itself.
