AN EXPOSITION ROMANCE.

Marriage of Will C. Frank and Miss Mamie Rives—The Wedding Occurred in Atlanta Nearly Two Years Ago. But Was Not Known Until Last Friday. Asheville Citizen, 17th.

Will C. Frank and Miss Mamie Frank Rives left for Knoxville this morning on the Norfolk-Chattanooga limited.

To absolutely correct, however, the item should read that Mr. and Mrs. Will C. Frank left this morning for Knoxville. For they are husband and wife, although not even the nearest relatives and closest friends of the young couple knew it, and because of this fact the announcement will prove a surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Frank's friends.

And therein lies a pretty little romance. Mr. Frank and Miss Rives had been lovers for several years. Once they had considered marriage, but the idea had been given up for the time. In the meantime it became necessary for Mr. Frank to go to Atlanta to consult Dr. Calhoun, the eminent specialist, on account of impaired eyesight. He went to the Gate City on the 23rd day of December, 1895, when the Cotton States and International exposition was nearing its closing days. Two days later Miss Rives, with her friend, Miss Anna Collins, went to Atlanta to see the exposition and to visit Miss Rives' aunt, Mr. Frank was unaware of his betrothed in the city until the morning of the 26th, when he saw the ladies as he sped down the street on a car. He sought them out, and the day following proposed to Miss Rives that they marry then and there. Her consent was after awhile given, and Mr. Frank hid him to the ordinary's office where he procured the license. That afternoon at 6:30, December 27th, 1895, they were made husband and wife at the manse of Central Presbyterian church, the ceremony being pronounced by the pastor, Rev. G. B. Strickler, D. D., in a beautifully decorated parlor, with two daughters of Dr. Strickler as witnesses.

Of the marriage Miss Rives' companion, Miss Collins, had no knowledge whatever, and in fact knew nothing of it until yesterday. Only those directly concerned knew aught of it; strict secrecy was imposed, and has been faithfully observed. Only two people in Asheville, Mr. Frank and his wife, knew of it up to yesterday. They appeared in public together just as though Mr. Frank was an accepted suitor instead of a doting husband.

The remainder of the story is quickly told. Mr. Frank a short time ago decided to remove to Knoxville, and he and Miss Rives—in reality Mrs. Frank—decided to announce the marriage and go together to their new home. Miss Rives—or Mrs. Frank—went out ostensibly to spend the night with a friend and—to day she and her husband are in Knoxville. A message delivered this morning informed the young lady's parents of the marriage and departure.

Mr. Frank, the bridegroom, is a well known young printer of Asheville, a native of the city and for years one of the Citizen's force. He is a handsome fellow, what compositors term a "swift," a quick, skillful workman, and is a brother of the Citizen's foreman, Robert C. Frank.

The bride is a daughter of Capt. and Mrs. B. F. Rives, and is a pretty and most estimable young lady. Both husband and bride have large numbers of friends here and all will extend to the couple their very best wishes.
