NOT UP-TO-DATE.

Oh, what would Rudyard and Roosevelt say if they knew about my boy?

When he comes home at night, there's no sign of a fight to fill my heart with joy.

His nose is not smashed, his cheek is not gashed, and his eyes are not black and blue;

And it fills me with dread when I think what I've read from those Strenuous, Stalky two!

O Kipling and Teddy! why doesn't he heed to the precepts laid down by you?

Why doesn't he glare, why doesn't he swear, as a youngster of pluck would do?

My heart is still when I ask for the kill, and he hasn't a thing to show;

For I know that fame and an honored name can never be his below.

—Louise Brewsters King.
