Old Sayings Brought up to Date Very Cleverly.

Completed Proverbs, by Lisle de Vaux Matthewman, pictured by Clare Victor Dwiggins, (Henry T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia,) is the fourth book of the Whimlets are notable successors. The same keen knowing humor which characterizes the books already printed is found in the latest work, and it will be found an ideal volume with which to pass a leisure moment. The illustrations are very dainty and effective.

The proverbs used are all well-known, but they have been brought up to date by additions, as will be seen in the following

"An obedient wife commands her husband"-if she takes care not to let him know it.

Route of the Bobolink.

The amount of travelling done by some of our birds is astonishing. Dr. Cooke says that the common nighthawk spends the summer in Alaska and the winter in Patagonia.

The bobolink, which is the reed bird of the Middle States and the rice bird of the South, winters on the waving pampas of Southern Brazil. It covers 700 miles from Cuba to the South American coast

Former Ambulance Surgeon Relates Amusing Incident at Holly Inn.

"The sad side, of course, predominates in this work," said a former ambulance surgeon, at The Holly Inn the other evening, "but there is often a tinge of real humor connected with it, neverthe-

"One night in answering a 'hurry call' I found a Jewess weighing something less than a ton, seated on a lounge, because the chairs all had arms, in the back part of third avenue drug store, and from her actions she had about twenty seconds to live.

"I examined her carefully and diagnosed her case as some hysteria and a good deal of affectation. I tried to get her name, but she was too weak to give it, and as a starter I suggested that unless she could give her name it would be impossible for me to take her to the hospital. With the assistance of this information she managed to whisper (Rebecca.)

Just then the driver came in and asked if he should bring the stretcher, and I told him no; that I guessed the patient could walk. Rebecca evidently understood me to say that I was not going to take her and when I turned toward her I found that she had fallen to the floor, taking care to do the act so as not to hurt herself, and was lying flat on her back suffering untold agony.

"The opportunity was ripe for a final test, so I bent over and said firmly, 'Come, Rebecca, get up and come to the ambulance with me, or I shall have to go away and leave you here." "

"Rebecca promptly rose and walked to the ambulance. When she reached the hospital she walked up stairs and was undressed and put to bed in charge of a nurse, but no special treatment was prescribed.

"Rebecca evidently thought she was being neglected, and presently she tumbled out of bed, taking care not to hurt herself in doing so. The nurse tried to lift her back, but it was no use, so she called in another nurse and the two tugged away for a while, but finally had to give it up and summon one of the wardmen, and it was about all the three could do to replace the helpless Rebecca in bed. Ten minutes later Rebecca had another spasm and fell on the floor very carefully. The lifting process was repeated, and no sooner had the company dispersed than Rebecca had a third fit.

"By this time the exercise act with Rebecca had ceased to be a joke, so the nurse reported to the matron. The matron consulted my card and finding only the single word "hysteria" decided to try an experiment. She walked in and gave verbal orders in Rebecca's hearing, to roll the patient up in a blanket as she lay on the floor, put a pillow under her head and let her lie there, for fear she 'might hurt herself.'

"The nurse carried out the instructions and ten minutes later quietly Rebecca rose and got into bed, and she managed to remain there the rest of the night, departing after breakfast the next morning."
