TRAVIS WINS ON LAST HOLE

Fownes Gives Him Close Call in Exceptionally Brilliant Match.

Medal Play Scores Were One Fifty-Six and One Fifty-Eight and Thirty-Sixth Hole Decided the Match

SATURDAY'S thirty-six hole final round in the Second Annual Midwinter Tournament, between Walter J. Travis, the British champion, and W. C. Fownes, Jr., of Pittsburg, was the most brilliant golf ever seen here, and it is generally conceded that the champion had one of the narrowest escapes of his long and somewhat spectacular career.

At the end of the morning round with medal play scores of 75 and 77, respectively, the Pittsburg player had his distinguished opponent two down, and the news spread like wildfire drawing a gallery of several hundred people to the course before the time of starting on the afternoon round, and many followed the match from beginning to end, witnessing a stroke for stroke contest that was uncertain until the finish.

Travis took the nineteenth hole, halved the twentieth and twenty-first, evening matters on the twenty-second, and gained a lead on the 25th, and though the score was even up several times afterward, the Pittsburger never again regained a lead.

The climax came on the 35th hole where Travis laid his opponent a dead stymie, but the Pittsburger Englished his ball so that it described a circle around the ball, halving the hole in three. On the 36th hole Fownes returned the compliment, but Travis had two for a halve and was not seriously inconvenienced, halving the hole and winning by one up.

The cards tell in detail the story of the fight.

IN MRS. TUFTS' HONOR.

Birthday Dinner at Holly Inn Delightful Feature of Week.

A delightful feature of the week was a dinner given at The Holly Inn by Mr. William Fuller Tufts of Brookline, Mass., in observance of Mrs. Tufts' birthday. Covers were laid for eight and the table was daintily decorated with cut flowers.

Following the repast informal congratulatory toasts and pleasant conversation rounded out an evening of unusual pleasure.

PISTOL SHOOTING TOURNEY

Friday's Handicap Contest Results in Good Scores.

Dr. Charles E. Mason, Wheeling W. Va., Wins Cup with Net Score of Two Hundred and Sixty-Eight

THE weekly handicap tournament of the Target Pistol Club drew a good field Friday, several new members participating. Dr. Charles E. Mason, of Wheeling, West Virginia, and J. R. Goodall, of St. Louis, making a good fight for the cup offered for the best net score, Dr. Mason winning with two hundred and sixty-eight.

Mrs. B. B. Glenny, of Sheffield, Mass., won the club badge offered for the best gross score, with one hundred and ninety-two.

A good deal of practice is being indulged in and steady advancement is being made by new members.
