JONES AND MACKINNEY LEAD

Rhode Island Champions Divide Honors in Midwinter Tennis Tourney

Climax of Brilliant Event Comes in Fast Play of Men's Singles and Doubles Events

PERFECT weather and a fast and representative field combined to make the fourth annual Midwinter Tennis Championship the most important of the series, play claiming the attention of large galleries throughout the week. Progressing by easy matches to the final rounds, a climax developed in men's singles and doubles in which J. D. E. Jones, the Rhode Island champion, won chief honors, not alone in singles but also in doubles, partnered with H. A. Mackinney, one time winner of the Rhode Island championship. ¶ In mixed doubles Mr. Mackinney and Mrs. W. F. Hager of Lancaster, Pa., were victorious over Mr. Jones and Mrs. Guy Metcalf of Providence, while in women's singles Miss Eleanor Cohen of Philadelphia triumphed over Mrs. Hager. In doubles, Miss Lucille Schulte of New York and Miss Agnes Blancke of Essex Fells defeated Mrs. Metcalf and Mrs. Hager, the event concluding the program.

The progress of the finalists in men's singles was one of few difficulties, and they were keen for the test which was much closer than the score indicates. ¶ Jones started out in splendid style, playing a safe and accurate game from the back tape, while Mackinney chose the net, relying on cross-court returns. Mackinney's strokes were powerful and bold, but he took chances which Jones' back-court placements, tricky returns and uniform steadiness checkmated, resulting in a 6-2 win. ¶ In the second set Mackinney won the first game by a series of cross-court shots and sizzling lawfards, losing the second, a deuce game, and making easy disposal of the third and fourth. Here the pair zig-zagged down to the ninth game which, after the score had been brought to deuce for the eighth time, Jones won with an overhead lob, 6-3.

In the final set Jones' superiority was manifest, Mackinney winning only the first game, his attempts to block Jones' progress with skimming net balls being so successfully killed that attack was transformed to defense. The fifth game was brought to deuce no less than four times, a speedy cut-stroke vanquishing Mackinney's hopes, 6-1.

Two of the Canadians were put out of the running in the first round, but Lawrence Cowing found Walter Goldstein a tenacious opponent who won the first set 6-1, but lost the remaining two by 5-7, 2-6. Mackinney's win was 6-2, 6-1 from E. S. Glassco. Thomas H. Hall, the only one of the far-north trio to advance on a 6-1, 6-2 win from Frank Rogers of Orange, promptly lost to Russell Dana of Providence, who in ical deuce sets, but Jones and Mackinney taking the thirteenth and fourteenth games on a brilliant spurt. ¶ The crisis came in the second set in which Balfe and Cowing captured the two opening games, Mackinney and Jones promptly winning the next three. Balfe and Cowing, however, returned the compliment, Mackinney and Jones winning the nine, a love game, the tenth for a score of 4-all, and they captured the next two games for a 7-5 victory. That the pace was too fast was apparent in the third set, the victors taking the first three games easily, losing the fourth and turn surrendered to Jones. ¶ Dr. Bertram F. Drake of New York had a hard 3-6, 6-2, 6-3 match in the second round and advanced to a 6-0, 6-4 defeat by Mackinney.

The final in men's doubles was unquestionably the prettiest tennis of the week; the result an 8-6, 7-5, 6-2 win by Jones and Mackinney from R. Adams Balfe of Brooklyn and Lawrence Cowing of Cincinnati. In the opening set play was even honors up to 6-all, Balfe and Cowing winning out time and again in critsixth, and winning the seventh and eighth for a score of 6-2. ¶ The team work of Jones and Mackinney was remarkable by its contrast; Jones deliberate and Mackinney aggressive. Cowing and Balfe were also well paired, but they lost through the systematic teamwork characteristic of their opponents, their best work manifest in service.

In the semi-final play also waxed fast and furious. Balfe and Cowing started the fun with a 3-6, 6-4, 7-5 win from
