Arrivals at The Carolina

Augmenting the army of golfers rejoicing at the opportunity for deep reading and quiet meditation given them by the Southern storm, this week the Hotel men from every quarter of the South assembled at the Carolina. It was the annual convention of the Southern Hotel Men's Association. This year the discussion of course turned almost entirely upon the vital and vexed question of compounding with the pampered appetites of the American traveller, and mixing patriotism with bran the better to feed the babies of Belgium. This, the ninth meeting of the association proved a holiday as well as successful business conclave for the one hundred and twenty members of the clan. The meetings were conducted by A. H. Galloway of Winston-Salem, president, and the disbursements made by H. T. Mennes of Danville chancellor of the Exchequer.

Those who value the traditions of the American stage, and look back with pleasure on the good old days when "The Old Homestead" and "In Old Kentucky" were in the heyday of their success, will be interested to know that Frederick Clare Boustead, who is spending the winter at the Carolina, was long associated intimately with Denman Thompson. Mr. Boustead, who is now master of ceremonies in the ballroom, so to speak, and who assists Mrs. Boustead as a teacher of dancing in the hotel, was formerly a famous actor. His career on the stage began as an opera singer, the Gilbert and Sullivan comedies being his repertory at one time, at another the famous production "She." In the "Old Homestead" he continued as a singer in the famous quartette and as a soloist. Finally he became the well-known tramp in the play "Happy Jack Hazard."

Boustead, who was known in stage days as Frederick Clare, followed Walter Gale, the original Happy Jack, and played in the first company with Denman Thompson himself for twenty-five years.

Another particularly happy innovation at the Hotel this year is the compensive Information Bureau established for the first time in the lobby. No matter what you want to know, it seems that all you have to do is to ask Mr. Foster. That is what he claims. And it looks right. Not only can Miss Felt, who operates this animated encyclopedia for him, untangle the route and secret schedules of the American Railroads, but can give you first hand and authentic directions how to get from Pinehurst to Montevideo or the Devil's gulch, Palm Beach or the City of Mexico, what to take with you in the shape of liquid insurance and arctics; where to stay and what to pay—what school to send your girl to for her finishing process, and the curriculum of every emporium of learning in the land. In a word, at this booth you can learn in five minutes as much about Hot Springs or Pasadena as the German Secret Service, Bradstreets and the Social Register, the almanac and the Handy Guide to Hotels for Travelling Men, could tell you in a year.

The roster this week reveals a long
