That Incomparable

The old geographies of early days told us the surface of the earth was made up of land and water. They might have gone farther and said the land was chiefly sand and clay. Those are the two great constituents. Rocks are the unbroken source of supply of the other two.

Clay is soluble. Clay means mud. Sand is insoluble. Sand is the incomparable builder of any place that is to be underfoot. Clay has its uses, but sand is the screen that makes the surface suitable to get about on.

After the rain has stopped the sandy golf course is ready for use in a few minutes. The sandy walk is fit to travel over. The children may play in the sandy lot and never get dirty. The porous soil of the sandy region absorbs the moisture and with it absorbs the humidity, and that gives one factor of the climate of the Sandhills.

Sand is a big influence in making this ideal climate.

Before you go home tie up a bit of this sand and put a house on it for a permanent winter home.

Consult the Real Estate Section at the General Office.

Sand was what the Government wanted when it bought Camp Bragg, not mud.
