On Understanding Youth Today

Ministers, editors, those past their mid-thirties, and most of official Washington seem to be having their troubles when it comes to understanding what makes the current college generation of boys tick. The fact that a few thousand immature boys want to say no to Uncle Sam seems to have caused a minor furor. A review of recent American history would show that what has happened is not too surprising. The draft was needed to mount World War II, and the Korean War and at the rate the Viet Nam war is "escalating" it will consume most of the patriotism that impels young men to volunteer for war. Let's consider the viewpoint of some of the young men who might have come from the rural quiet of the Roanoke-Chowan area. On the college campus they are being told for the first time that what they think and what they do are of importance to the whole world. After years of the close dictates of parents, teachers and their local leaders, this thought is almost overwhelming. They are at a point in life where they can see a bright future even if they can't anticipate all of the children they will raise and the time payments they will make. The very idea of submitting to more years of regimentation is objectionable to them, especially the idea that they might die in a land they don't know for an idea that they don't understand. If this attitude shocks you, you should remember that they were not here when Winston Churchill came to Fulton, Missouri and warned that Russian intentions were not all they seemed in the first breather of the World War II peace period. They would not have been old enough to remember the Russian intervention in Greece or the Hungarian rebellion. The lessons of history are for mature people and the right of youngsters to think, debate and act is not an automatic guarantee of wisdom. For those who are concerned, let them reflect that there are not many draft card burners, as there were not many defectors in Korea in spite of the furor that 37 traitors caused. When the draft call comes, most of these boys will go peacefully and serve well. Under the "G.I. Bill" the students who came back from the wars were a quite different breed from the boys who went off to war. Most of them were draftees and not volunteers. Their maturity showed on the campus and in some ways they were more men of the world than were some of the professors. Unfortunately, the German, Japanese and Russian boys were just as patriotic and dependable as their American counterparts; but they had little or nothing to say about how the world was to be run. The fact is that most boys on college campuses have no doubts that the United States is motivated in what it does by ingrained moral precepts. Those who are still at home or working in a local store or plant have the same vague understanding of what it is we are trying to do in this troubled world. Youth will survive these growing pains, as will the nation, and in fact they are the ones who will be asked to go and risk death. They do have some rights in the matter.

Sincerely, Di-El

- Are manners out of style? Dear Toems: What are manners? Manners are a common sense code of good taste. Manners help to make life more pleasant. They are something that you should use every day, not just on special occasions. When your parents remind you to use your manners, don't think that they are old fashioned. Your manners and how you use them make impressions on the people you meet. Some everyday manners for teens are: 1. Be thoughtful of other persons and their feelings in your speech and actions. 2. Boys should open doors for girls. This includes car doors. 3. A girl should give a boy a chance to be polite. 4. Don't form prejudice against a person because of the state of their family. 5. There is a crowd. Don't force yourself in when you are not invited. 6. Girls should never chase boys. 7. Boys should not blow their horn for their date. Instead, they should knock on the door. 8. Boys and girls should give their seats to older people if there are no other seats available. A boy should give his seat to a girl when there are no others. 9. "Thank you," "please," and "excuse me," are words that should be in everyone's vocabulary. 10. When speaking to adults says, "yes sir," and "yes mam." Don't call an adult by his or her first name unless you are asked to do so. 11. Don't change your mind after accepting an invitation even if you receive a later one that you would rather accept. 12. Be pleasant on the telephone. Your voice shows your personality. 13. Don't talk in church while waiting for the service to begin. 14. Be a good sport in all things, whether you win or lose. 15. Dress in good taste and dress for the occasion. Manners, if they are to be of any use to us, must be more than mere rules to be followed mechanically. They must become a part of us and of our everyday habits. Sincerely, Di-El news. Then I turned on the television. I remember everything all weekend was geared to the assassination and it colored every emotion I had. Anyone that had made such an imprint as President Kennedy - it was such a waste. Mrs. Rufus Johnson, Severn - "I was at home and had just turned on the television. I guess, just like everyone else, I was shocked and could not believe it. I kept in touch by TV all day and was interested in the reactions of other people. I think we lost a great man - and I guess the memory will live in my mind for years to come."

Ernest Branch, Rich Square - "I was in a grocery store when someone called on the telephone to tell us of the shooting of President Kennedy. It was a terrible shock. I think it shocked me more because of the youthfulness and vitality of the President. It was hard to believe that such a thing could happen." Mrs. H. R. Howell, Jr., Seaboard - "I happened to be standing in front of my TV (it was on) when the bulletin came on. My first reaction was it could not happen in this country. I think it is hard to describe exactly how I felt but it seemed like the whole world had tumbled down on me. I got that same reaction from the commentators. I do not feel that I will ever get over it. Our children were the same ages, and I think that impressed me so - and it is one reason I feel I will always remember that moment."

Next November 22, the people will still remember and it will be that memory that each year in some way will dampen "happy spirits" during the days preceding the Thanksgiving holiday.

Carlton Morris Writes - Thanksgiving Is A Milestone Along The Road Of Life

Thanksgiving, like most major holidays, is a much remembered milestone along the road of life, and as the frost accumulated on the pumpkin, I enjoy it more in memory than reality. On the other side of the ledger, sometimes the memory of it is only sorrow, for once you have reached beyond the half-way mark, you're bound to have a lot of sadness mixed with joy, and it takes a strong man to separate the one from the other. Lately I've been trying out the therapy of walking, and walking brings on thinking and thinking brings on memories, and seems like the older I get the more I remember even if it never happened. I remember a lot about Thanksgiving, and seems like a lot of living has hinged around that one day. And walking across our autumn countryside, I naturally think of all the people that I, in one way or another, associate with Thanksgiving. I remember how one of my classmates came home with me for Thanksgiving, back when I was in high school, and I took him to all my favorite hunting places. We walked from daybreak until dark and I can't even remember being tired. How can one be tired when spending the whole day with a good friend? The day was so great it has remained with me down through the long corridor of years and warms a very special place in my old heart every Thanksgiving. I imagine it is like that with all people when the years begin to add up to something like 39. We've had a beautiful autumn in our part of the world. The sun has climbed gently up the face of heaven and smiled down on us with all the warmth a man could desire. The sunsets are pinkgold and should be painted by a great artist and hung in all the galleries of the world so they could be seen by all men. I think the very sight of a perfect sunset her ankle Thursday. Mrs. Edward Bunn of Baltimore, Md., spent last week with her mother, Mrs. Ellen Porter.
