

MRS. HINCKLEY NERVOUS WRECK

Tells Women How She Was Restored to Perfect Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Memphis, Tenn.—“Two years ago I was completely run-down and my nerves were a wreck. I could not sweep a room without resting. I could not do my work except a little at a time, and the doctor's medicine did not help me. One day some one threw your little book on to my porch, and in it I read several testimonials of women who had been like myself. I went right out and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and before I had taken the whole of that bottle I knew it was helping me. I took six bottles, and then in about three months I took two more. Now I am in perfect health. I do all of my own work and could do more. I can truly say that I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gave me my health.”—Mrs. O. J. HINCKLEY, 316 Union Ave., Memphis, Tenn.

A Stride of Twenty-Five Feet.
The average ostrich can outrun the best Arab horse. If the bird will condescend on a straight-away course. The fact that wild ostriches like to run in circles invariably leads to capture, as a well-trained Arabian horse will follow the shortest course, knowing that ultimately the fleeing ostrich will turn in his direction. In full flight the ostrich often shows a stride of 20 to 25 feet, which affords one explanation of its remarkable speed.—Source Magazine.

WITH THE HIGH SCHOOL CLASSICS

By MARGARET BOYD

"The thrall in person may be free in soul, And I shall see the jousts," —Idylls of the King.

When Gareth wished to go to Arthur's court his mother forbade his going unless he would there serve as scullery lad, without telling his name or rank to any one, for a year and a day. She thought the young prince much too proud to accept such terms and hoped to keep him home with her for another year or two; but he accepted her terms, because by so doing he could see the jousts.

Those with a like spirit get anything they want from life. Whether the desire is to see the jousts, to gain wealth, to gain power, or what not, if a man desires that one thing so much that he is willing to do anything whatever to gain his desire, he will gain it.

Most people go through life wishing for a dozen things instead of one. As a result they often get nothing at all. If Gareth had insisted upon retaining his princely rank and his servants, he could not have seen the jousts. He got the one thing he wanted by giving up everything else for it.

Wealth and power and learning and beauty and health and the many other things for which men long may all be had if one is willing to pay the price. Often the price is much more than the thing is worth, but if one is willing to pay it, the thing becomes his. The price for wealth may be unending toil; denial of comfort and all self-independence, and a sacrificing of friends, relatives and principles. The price for power may be murder, as it was in the case of Macbeth, and as it has been in the case of many another ruler. The price for learning is much study and self-deprivation. The price for beauty and the price for health are much the same—eternal vigilance, proper exercise, temperate diet, hygienic habits and a calm mind.

Gareth was able to reconcile himself to mental servitude by the reflection that the thrall in person may be free in soul. That his reflection was correct is abundantly attested by history. Two names stand out prominently from the many names of those who have been free in mind, although bound in body—Aesop and Epictetus. Both were slaves—the latter of a master who once tortured him by breaking his leg, but no one could have been freer in soul. The first by his fables, and the latter by his discourses, have done more to mold the thought and manner of mankind than any of the freemen who were their contemporaries.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men, Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; Omitted, all the voyage of their life Is bound in shallows and in miseries." —Julius Caesar.

Modern writers speak of this "tide in the affairs of men" as the psychological moment. Anything attempted is sure to succeed; that which is attempted at any other moment is likely to fail.

Solomon spoke of the "tide" as a time or season—"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." No man would plant potatoes in frozen ground and expect them to grow, for winter is not the season for planting potatoes. It is just as hopeless to start a venture at the wrong season as to plant potatoes at the wrong time.

Our inventions show the importance of the "tide in the affairs of men"—whether we call it that or the psychological moment or the right time. It has often been pointed out that the people of antiquity knew the principle of the printing press, because they stamped coins with a die. There was no need of a printing press during the time when the only material men had for writing on was parchment or vellum or papyrus. When the discovery of a way of making paper afforded the psychological moment, the printing press was invented.

Similarly with aircraft. Leonardo is said to have known the principles of the airplane four centuries ago; but he did not bother building aircraft because there was no development of commerce and industry sufficient to make his century the psychological time for such an invention.

The martyrs to science and to religion were those who attempted to popularize beliefs for which the psychological moment had not yet arrived. How much their deaths had to do with creating the psychological moment we have no means of knowing.

Usually, a man fails to achieve fortune not so much because he cannot recognize the "tide in the affairs of men" as because he is not ready to take advantage of it.

Every twenty years or less we have a financial depression in our country. During this depression stocks and bonds and property usually sell for a fraction of their real value, and the man who has savings has his opportunity to launch forth on the tide that will carry him to fortune. As the Scotch express it, however, "When it rains porridge, one seldom has a spoon."

Portugal's National Epic.
The national epic of Portugal is the "Lusiad," written by Luis Vaz de Camoens (1524-1580) and published in 1572, says the Detroit News. The great poem, which has been translated into many languages, was begun by Camoens while he was in exile in India and was completed shortly after he was allowed to return to Portugal. Before 1700, 38 editions of the "Lusiad" were printed in Lisbon. Although the "Lusiad" was, as a piece of literature, a tremendous success, it netted its author little financial gain, for, as his epitaph, destroyed in 1775, read, "He lived poor and neglected and so died."

Are You Discouraged, Blue?

This Advice Is of Vital Importance to You
Columbia, S. C.—"I was suffering with a breakdown in health, and became discouraged. I suffered with bearing pains and pains down through my limbs, my appetite was poor and I became frail and weak. Nothing I took seemed to do me any good. One day my husband got one of Dr. Pierce's pamphlets and we soon decided to try the 'Favorite Prescription.' My husband bought a half dozen bottles to start with. I began to improve at once and before these bottles were gone I was perfectly well and have been well ever since."—Mrs. Hattie Wessinger, 209 Sumpter St.
