Scott's Creek was not as high this morning as it has been at other times, but the small creeks and branches, coming in near Sylva, were at an unusually high flood stage, and did a great deal of damage to property along their banks.

In other words, the new naval agreement is that England and America will each build as large navies as they want to, but neither will surpass the other. That is drawing closer to a defensive alliance between the British Empire and the United States, which might not be such a bad idea at that.

Yancey county folks are entering a mighty protest over the attitude of Asheville toward the selection of the Big Tom Wilson route for the freeway to the top of Mount Mitchell, Asheville, when it comes to roads and such matters, has always taken a small attitude, instead of looking toward the development of Western North Carolina as a whole. If chestnuts are to be pulled out of the fire we are all expected to be at the pulling. For instance, the location of the Parkway from Soco Gap to Cherokee would ruin Sylva and other supporters of Asheville. Yet she is hell-bent on it. Another thing we'll wager is that when the Parkway gets as far as Asheville, the agitation for its completion will cease, in those parts. The Yancey folks could have learned about Asheville from us.

developed and brought to a high degree, courage, initiative, self-reliance and personal responsibility in its citizens. Those are the elements which make up what we call "character." They are not the product of government; they are the qualities which are developed in each individual, one by one, by the combined influence of the home, the church, the school and the environment of one's youth. Government cannot make men self-reliant or responsible. It can destroy or impair those qualities by ordering men's lives for them. By putting the emphasis on dollars instead of upon character it can instill the belief that the only thing that counts in life is material success. Nothing can more effectively block the road to happiness than that.

log house in a cove on R. M. Davis' land just back of town, reports that he was visited by white caps on Tuesday of this week. He says he had previously been warned that he might receive such a visit and prepared himself accordingly. He says that on Tuesday night near midnight he was awakened by a demand from parties outside the house to open the door and come out, one of them giving the assurance that they would not purchase. He asked who they were but received no reply but a repetition of the demand to open the door and come out. He again asked with an oath who they were, and was told that he must not be cursing them or they would come in and "beat him out of him". He says he made no further reply but wanted to see what they would do. They repeated the demand that he should open the door or they would break down the door and soon proceeded to put their threat into execution. Taking a large stone, the door was battered inward and fell on the floor. Mitchell says he was standing on the foot of the bed near the right side of the door with his rifle in his hand when it fell. Looking out he saw two men near the upper corner of the house. He discharged his rifle at the one in front and saw them both throw up their hands and run. He then rushed to the opposite side of the door and saw one man near the lower corner of the house aimed at him with his pistol. When he fired at the first two a shot at him came from the direction that they were standing. This shot struck the corner of the door facing, splitting off a splinter, and then struck the door facing on the other side of the door. After his last shot the party retired and he was unable to see in what direction they went. In proof of the truth of his story, he shows blood at the two places where the men were standing, and also at various other places, notably at a point some sixty yards above the house, where the party apparently halted for a time. Besides this, he shows the rock with which the door was broken down, the mark of the bullet which was fired at him and which he afterwards picked up, and four switches they had provided to use upon him. He says the men looked and talked like negroes and that he was entirely unable to form even a suspicion of the identity of either of the party except one. He thought he recognized the voice of one as that of a man from Georgia, who spent a night or two at his house just before the attack. The mystery is what became of the dead and wounded?
