Edward might cite them to the case of David as ample precedent for a king coveting another man's wife.

Why not compromise the matter that has the British world on its ear, by crowning Wally, "Queen of the Delidiggers"?

A PRETTY BIRD FLIES?

Is the dove of peace about to take flight from the Old World and find herself a nesting place in the arms of the larks and the tempo of the Montezumas?

With Europe and Asia torn with age-old fears and prejudices, complicated by modern economic theories and economic actualities; the nations of the Americas gather about the council fires in the Argentine and in all good will seek to consolidate their prayers for peaceful pursuits.

So, while no modern prophet can see very far into the future, and only rare facts as they are and prepare to meet all possible incidents, it may be that the convention to which President Roosevelt went in the Capital of the Argentine will prove to have been of greater significance in the history of the world than any of us now dream.

At any rate, we are sure that the possibilities are that it will not turn out to be another of those pretty, empty gestures toward peace that we and the rest of the world have made in the past decade.

We have seen the Kellogg-Briand Treaties trampled to pieces beneath the greedy feet of signatory nations. The fog of fear and greed have blotted out the light of the London Disarmament Conference.

What of Buenos Aires? The conditions are different. No American nation has fear of another or grounds for fear. None covets the territory of another. All seek to live in peace. The entire group wishes to see the free flow of commerce and the exchange of goods and go-d-will.

There are no ancient grievances lurking in the background. No overcrowded populations seek land upon which to live.

Is it possible that, in the planning of Providence, these conditions are here that, if peace is driven from Eurasia, a safe repository for the remnants of civilization may be found in the Americas?

WASHINGTON NEWS

the existing government of Spain is distinctly communistic and has the backing of Soviet Russia.

It is not difficult to imagine a situation developing which would bring about a general European war. In that event, America's position of neutrality would be increasingly difficult to maintain, especially if England and France were involved.

The appointment of Joseph H. Davis as Ambassador to Russia is looked upon here as an important move on the diplomatic chessboard. Mr. Davis is a former chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, a lawyer of wide experience, a wealthy man in his own right who later married one of America's wealthiest women. It is the expectation that he will find it possible to make sound trade agreements and treaties with Russia. Washington will longingly look upon the Russian market for American manufactured goods and is not blind to the fact that Russia produces great quantities of mineral products which are essential to American industry.

The last appointment made by the President before he departed for South America is recognized here with enthusiasm. That is the naming of Charles Edison, son of the great inventor and head of the Edison industries, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the post which the President himself held in the Wilson administration.

Mr. Edison has inherited a considerable share of his father's genius and has developed on his own account a high degree of business ability. The gossip here have it that he is slated to succeed Secretary Swanson, who is expected to retire from the Cabinet because of long continued ill health.
