Campaign

"Going first is what leaders are expected to do, and Chancellor Paul Hardin and his wife, Barbara, have done just that," Eyre said.

Hardin also announced a donation of $100,000 from the Coca Cola Foundation of Atlanta. The Coca Cola donation will be allocated entirely to the University staff training and developmental fund.

"It will enrich the working environment for the more than 6,000 employees (at UNC)," Hardin said.

Since the Bicentennial Campaign started in 1989, the massive fund-raiser has raised more than $240 million in pledges, including about $2.5 million from the faculty. Previous fund-raising efforts by the University have not exceeded $35 million.

The campaign will continue through next year. The amount donated by the "deeply devoted" faculty sends a message to the General Assembly, Hardin said.

The Campus Campaign is the third phase of the Bicentennial Campaign, and fund-raising will continue through March. All campus staff and faculty will have the opportunity to contribute to the campaign. "It's fund-raising for our community, by our community," Hardin said. "What I see before me gives me such incredible optimism."

Although the Bicentennial Campaign has an ultimate goal of $320 million, the campus campaign has no set goal, taking pressure off of the faculty and the volunteers.

"Participation is our ultimate goal," said Nancy Davis, a member of the Bicentennial Development Department. "The campus campaign has gone off so far without a hitch."

Donors to the campus campaign may select where their contribution is to be used and are encouraged to give not only monetary donations but also commodities such as rare books. Donors also may elect to give through a payroll deduction instead of the more traditional cash donation or pledge.

morning, said conditions weren't so orderly.

"When we were lining up, people started sprinting down the hill," he said.

"Today I got my tickets ... but there were still 300 or 400 people behind me. I think they handed out more numbers than they had tickets left."

Kirincich said some people thought they were getting brushed off but believed overall that everybody was happy.

Parents

has taken courses from her mother and her father, who both teach in the University's philosophy department.

"They're very different, but I think they're both really good," she said.

Boxill felt pressured to do well in her parents' classes. "I didn't want to embarrass myself in front of them."

Her mother, Jan Boxill, a lecturer in philosophy, said having her daughter in her class also had made her self-conscious. Debbie Boxill said her mother got to know a lot of her friends because she encouraged them to take Jan Boxill's class, "Philosophical Issues in Feminism." "She's a very people person," Debbie Boxill said.

"That's how I teach," Jan Boxill said. "I like to have a one-to-one relationship with the students." Although Jan Boxill likes to know her students well, her close relationship with her daughter meant her teaching assistants had to grade Debbie Boxill's assignments.

Cambanis, who has not taken any of his father's statistics courses, said he thought it wasn't very ethical for students to take their parents' courses.

But he does enjoy listening to his friends as they talk about his father's classes. "It's always very positive," he said. "I get to brag about my pop."

Gwendolen Blackburn said hearing

Tickets

"Everybody that camped out got a ticket," she said.

More than 4,000 senior tickets were given out on Friday, Kirincich said.

Todd Austell, a member of the ticket distribution committee, said the demand for tickets added to the confusion around the Smith Center. "I've been working ticket distribution for 3 years, and this is the most tickets I've seen sold," he said.

Austell said he was surprised to see that everyone in line got a ticket.

Austell said that tickets were distributed randomly to seniors by having the ticket seller hold up an envelope with tickets to the window and having the senior choose one. Some seniors got good seats and were complaining because they were not familiar with the section they received, Austell said.

She said that by 3:30 p.m. Sunday, all the student tickets had been given out.

Tickets

Professor William Harmon said it would be a "hoor" to have his son in one of his classes.

Many of the students whose parents are professors have lived in Chapel Hill most of their lives. Jan Boxill acknowledged that it had been difficult for her two daughters, who graduated from Chapel Hill High School, to attend UNC.

But Stamatis Cambanis, chairman of the statistics department, said, "The best way to show our faith in the institution is to have our children go here."

Ted Lotchin said living in one place all his life did not really bother him. "Chapel Hill the town and Chapel Hill the University are two very separate things."

"(But) if I go to grad school here, I'll shoot myself."
