BOG
 for women.

Peterson, chairman of the board of trustees at Eastern Carolina University, said a House of Representatives committee interviewed each of the candidates and reported the results of the interviews and a questionnaire to the House.

"The House is looking for people who are willing to go in open minded," he said.

Among his main concerns are making sure that students were prepared for the business world after graduation, he said.

"(I) know what we look for in business (in graduates)," he said.

Peterson said that before approving a tuition increase he would like to see the board look inward and see where the money was being spent.

"I've never seen any organization where you cannot find some place to improve the efficiency," he said.

Incumbent Ruth Woods said a possible tuition increase was an important issue in the election, and said she wanted to see an impact study conducted for each campus before any action was taken. She said an increase could limit access to some schools and not to others.

She said she saw the election of someone of a different generation such as Mark Bibbs as another way to diversify the board.

"It brings a new, intergenerational perspective," Woods said.

Henry Hayes, candidate for a minority party position and the social services director for Warren County, said the House was looking for people with innovative ideas for solving the UNC-system's problems.

Hayes, a member of the board of trustees for North Carolina Central University, said the cost of education could be reduced if course selection and scheduling allowed more students to graduate on time.

"The cost of education is really getting prohibitive," he said.

Hayes said the addition of Mark Bibbs to the board would pose no problems. Bibbs, a first-year law student, is seeking to be the first student to hold a post as a voting member of the BOG.

"He seems to be an intelligent person who could bring some insight," he said.

L.C. Bruce, a candidate for an at-large position who has worked extensively with many of the system schools, said he thought the BOG should work to ensure that all 16 UNC-system schools offered the best education possible.

"I think we need to take a new look at whether we are furnishing a quality education at all 16 universities," he said. "I want to see some peace and harmony between these institutions."

The other candidates for at-large seats include incumbents Roderick Adams, first elected in 1985; Ellen Newbold, first elected in 1989; and Harold Webb, first elected in 1989. The other at-large candidates are Bibbs and H.D. Reeves Jr.

The candidates for the two minority party seats are John Cecil, Carla Dupuy and incumbent John Garwood.

The candidates for the woman's seat are Elizabeth Lee, Valeria Lee and LaDane Williamson.

The N.C. Senate chose four at-large seats and two seats for women earlier this year.

New York split on St. Patrick's Day

The Associated Press
 NEW YORK — It was a badly splintered St. Patrick's Day celebration.

The mayor stayed at home. The cardinal was snug under a canopy on the cathedral steps, waving and smiling at paraders. And nearly 200 gay protesters who raised a racket ended up celebrating at Manhattan Central Booking.

Only about 120,000 people marched Wednesday in the nation's oldest St. Patrick's Day parade, tens of thousands less than usual, and spectators along Fifth Avenue were rarely more than three deep.

Organizers blamed the poor turnout on a never-ending Irish-style drizzle. But what was most remarkable about the 232nd parade, even by the unpleasant standards of recent years, was how many Irish-for-a-day were going their own way.

More than an hour before the main parade's start, hundreds of marchers protesting the exclusion of Irish homosexuals staged a countermarch up Fifth Avenue, chanting "Hey-hy, ho-ho, homophobia has got to go!" When they ran into a line of police, they knelt or squatted as police cuffed them and moved them into vans and buses.

In all, 194 were arrested for violating a court order, including City Councilman Thomas Duane, an acknowledged homosexual who was cheered loudly as he stepped into a police wagon.

"Our tax dollars at work," laughed one protester.

A judge ruled Tuesday that the Irish Lesbian and Gay Organization, which has battled for three years to be included in the main parade, could not stage a protest parade on the avenue.

Mayor David Dinkins boycotted the parade.

and their staffs are supplemented with volunteers from the PTA organization.

Doris Gill has given eight hours a day to the thrift shops for the past five years. "My children are grown and graduated from college now," she said. "I still like to volunteer my time because I meet so many interesting people here."

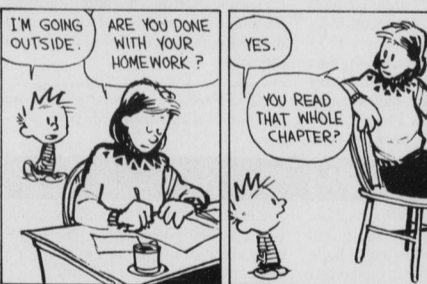

Jones-Harris has one daughter in the public school system, but this is not the only reason she is dedicated to her work at the thrift shop.

"I like to do something for my community, and this is something where everybody participates."

Catherine Staunton, another employee who has worked in the thrift shops for more than a decade, said that although some donations seemed off-the-wall, the stores never threw anything away.

"We have piles of items we can't sell that we call 'grice,'" Staunton said. "Two organizations come and pick it up and take it to local churches. Somebody, somewhere, ends up using it."

The term "grice" originated from the name of the man who first began to pick up the store's leftovers and distribute them to the needy, Staunton said.

Jones-Harris said the policy of the store never to throw anything away almost always paid off.

"You find a shoe without a mate, you hang on to it," she said.

"You never know when the next pile of shoes is gonna have that mate, and then, you've got a perfectly good pair of shoes."

The program was established 40 years ago, when the Chapel Hill schools' art guild wanted to hire a new teacher but lacked the funds to do so. Members decided to accept donations from the community for a clothes closet. They were overwhelmed by the generosity of the donors, and soon, the fund-raiser became an annual event.

Eventually, PTA members set up the first PTA Thrift Shop on Franklin Street. As the town of Chapel Hill grew, so did the amount of merchandise donated.

The shop moved to the Village Plaza location about 10 years ago, and the opening of the second store in Carrboro soon followed.

Prices at the thrift shop begin at 10 cents and seldom exceed $10. A broken-in pair of ice skates was priced at $3, an Outback Red skirt at $4. Used ties go for 50 cents, as do leather belts. The store even was selling a UNC graduation gown for $2.

The PTA stores often end up with an overload of merchandise. When this happens, they hold "Bag Days," during which customers may buy a grocery bag of items for $1. The Carrboro store has outdoor Bag Days almost every Saturday.

Nearly 30 part-time and full-time employees work at the two thrift shops, and their staffs are supplemented with volunteers from the PTA organization.

Doris Gill has given eight hours a day to the thrift shops for the past five years. "My children are grown and graduated from college now," she said. "I still like to volunteer my time because I meet so many interesting people here."

Jones-Harris has one daughter in the public school system, but this is not the only reason she is dedicated to her work at the thrift shop.

"I like to do something for my community, and this is something where everybody participates."

York Tuesday upon learning that his grandmother had died. The small forward will fly back into North Carolina this afternoon.

"With Brian's grandmother passing and Derrick's injury, maybe the best thing we can do right now is play a game," Sullivan said.

"We're trying to improve ourselves," said Smith. "We've certainly talked about East Carolina and what they like to do, but we won't spend a great deal of time walking through. Watch for that, watch for that." "We've never done that, nor will I start now."

"I am concerned about East Carolina."
