Hardin refuses to call BOT meeting

By Thanassis Cambanis
University Editor

Chancellor Paul Hardin said Sunday night that he would not respond to "requirements" established by protesters who have occupied South Building since Thursday morning.

"I don't understand what the people in South Building think they can accomplish by this," he said in a telephone interview from New Orleans, where he is attending the Final Four.

South Building, located on the north end of Polk Place, is the University's administrative headquarters.

Student demonstrators faxed a letter to Hardin at his hotel in New Orleans asking him to endorse the BCC Advisory Board report on the Sonja Haynes Stone Black Cultural Center and asking him to convene an emergency Board of Trustees meeting to decide on the future of a free-standing BCC.

"It's absolutely out of the question to call a meeting of the Board of Trustees," Hardin said.

The BOT decided March 26 to put the BCC issue on the agenda for a May 28 meeting. Trustees have received copies of two reports on the BCC — one from the Chancellor's Working Group and one from the BCC Advisory Board. The two reports differ on the sites and sizes they recommend for a BCC.

The working group, headed by Provost Richard McCormick, recommends two possible sites in its report: the plot of land between Wilson Library and Dey Hall, and Coker Woods, located between the Bell Tower and Coker Hall.

Hardin said he would make a recommendation to the BOT after the Buildings and Grounds committee holds a public hearing on the site issue April 13.

"I sent both of the reports to the Buildings and Grounds Committee for a site recommendation," Hardin said.

Ruby Sinreich and Staci Hill, official spokeswomen for the protesters, said students would stay in the South Building rotunda until Hardin responded to their requests in writing.

"We're very happy that the BOT has put this issue on the agenda for May, but we don't want students to get left out of the discussion," Sinreich said.

Sinreich said trustees needed to discuss the BCC issue immediately.

"This is an absolutely urgent issue and has to be solved before students leave for the summer," she said.

Hardin said he would not stray from the procedure followed for planning every campus building "in the history of the University."

"Everyone else has taken their time, there is no reason to hurry the trustees," he said. "Nothing could upset the trustees more than having an emergency meeting called because of some coercion or threat."

Sinreich said the fact that Hardin had not responded directly to the students was indicative of his reluctance to communicate with the student body.

"He has not communicated with us in any way since we initiated the occupation," she said. "It just proves our point that he doesn't communicate with students — he doesn't listen to us and he doesn't talk to us."

Hardin said he did not think students would stay in South Building.

"I can't imagine that they will stay that long, but if they don't interfere with anybody's freedom of movement or destroy any property, I don't have a problem with them staying," Hardin said. "I'm not rattled by their presence."

Sinreich said students occupied the building in shifts. "There's been no problem getting people to stay here," she said. "People are pretty surprised that we're still here."

Boulton: Congress can't stop DTH from publishing

By Marty Minchin
Assistant University Editor

At the final meeting of the 74th Student Congress Wednesday, members voted 9-7-2 to pass a bill that called for prohibiting The Daily Tar Heel from using Student Union property and evicting the newspaper from its offices in Suite 104.

"It's a matter of time to get the DTH evicted," said Rep. Eric Pratt, Dist. 22, author of the bill. "It's going to happen."

But Donald Boulton, vice chancellor for student affairs, said only he and the Union Board of Directors had the power to evict student groups from the Union.

"I'm not sure what's behind all this," Boulton said. "I don't know what the passing of the bill means, but as far as I'm concerned it is not within (Student Congress') jurisdiction as of who in the Student Union."

"I would like to keep The Tar Heel where it is."

The DTH currently works under an annual budget of $624,000, said Kevin Schwartz, DTH general manager. The DTH received 4 percent of its budget, or approximately $2,500, from congress funds for the 1992-93 year.

Next year the DTH will be financially independent from the University and will not receive any congress funding.

The bill, which Pratt authored, states that as of March 29, 1993, the DTH was publishing illegally. The Student Congress Finance Committee had tabled the DTH budget at a spring 1992 meeting, and the finance committee had not rescinded that action, the bill stated.

The final reason the bill lists for evicting the DTH is that the publication had acted illegally when barring the Student Activities Fund Office from conducting an audit of the DTH.

Josh Siegal, president of the DTH Board of Directors, said the board decided an audit by student congress was not valid. Peter Wallsten, DTH editor, said congress did not have the authority to demand that the DTH be audited by student government.

"We were just recently audited on a routine basis by an independent firm and everything turned out fine," he said. "Student government has absolutely no authority over us whatsoever and they have no right to call for an audit."

Pratt said the DTH was publishing illegally because the DTH's budget had been tabled.

"We tabled the budget, and they aren't supposed to be printing until we reach some kind of conclusion or agreement," Pratt said.

But Student Congress Speaker Jennifer Lloyd said the Student Code required that congress give a certain amount of money to the DTH last year, and the finance committee's tabling of the budget had no effect on the payment to the DTH.

Lloyd said the finance committee was not required by the Student Code to look at student groups' budgets every year. But the finance committee examines the budgets every year only to make sure the groups used congress funds consistently and correctly, she said.

"That's just an implied power — it's not even in the code," Lloyd said.

Lloyd said Pratt did not realize congress did not have any jurisdiction over most of the DTH's budget.

"Eric's misinformed," she said. "Eric seems to think he should have jurisdiction over the entire budget."

Boulton said he considered the DTH a student group even though the publication would not receive student funds next year.

"The independence the DTH has is a business independence," he said. "There was no attempt to turn the DTH into an independent newspaper. The DTH is the student newspaper — always has been, always will."

Town requests federal grant to reduce drug-related crime

By Robert Strader
Staff Writer

In an effort to combat drug-related crime in public housing developments, Chapel Hill is applying for a two-year $156,000 federal grant.

The money would be used for:

- increased patrolling of public housing communities,
- additional physical security improvements,
- continued rental of a van for youth activities and
- continued employment of a full-time resident activities coordinator.

"Our ultimate goal is to have no drugs in the public housing units," said Glenn Davis, assistant director of Chapel Hill's Department of Housing and Community Development.

Chapel Hill Town Council member Joe Capowski said drug-related crime in the town's 312 public housing units needed immediate attention.

"The drug problem is serious for the residents who live there and the town that owns (public housing units)," he said.

Capowski said that if the grant request was approved by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, it would be the first step in the right direction.

"It's the best we can do to attack the problem," he said.

Council member Alan Rimer said that although the town needed to address the problem of drug-related crime in public housing areas, it was important to acknowledge that no area of town was immune to drug problems.

"We have this problem in the down-

Week to present solutions for racial problems

By Holly Stepp
Staff Writer

Students for the Advancement of Race Relations will attempt to cultivate campus racial awareness this week through programs focusing on cultural education and racial harmony as part of the fifth-annual Race Relations Week.

"Our slogan 'It's Raining Revolution — It's Raining Solutions' exemplifies our goals and what we're trying to do," Race Relations Week coordinator Mona Doshi said.

The slogan is a quote from the Arrested Development song "Raining Revolution."

Doshi said the goals of the week were to bring about racial awareness and to find solutions to campus problems involving race relations.

Keynote speakers for the week include Attallah Shabazz, daughter of Malcolm X, and Delores Huerta, co-founder of United Farm Workers.

Fred Wherry, SARR co-chairman, said it was important that the week include solutions as well as open dialogue about race relations.

"One without the other only exacerbates problems," Wherry said. "It is good to set the fires of passion, but without solutions you have a bunch of angry people with no way to vent that energy."

Race Relations Week began on Sunday with a State of Emergency address focusing on the history of racism and its effects on the black community. Williams Forbes, a researcher from Norfolk, Va., gave the lecture.

Artist Sabrina Evans performed a one-woman play titled "Dark and Lovely: Expressions of Beauty by Black Women" in the Union Cabaret Sunday.

Organizers said they hoped to have performers from various cultural groups in the Pit every day from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Today's activities will feature a seminar about AIDS and the African-American community at 2 p.m. in the Union. Spike Lee's film "Do The Right Thing" will be shown at noon in the Sonja H. Stone Black Cultural Center.

Today's programming will conclude with a lecture by UNC geography Professor James Johnson on racial discrimination in the housing market. The University chapter of Habitat for Humanity will sponsor the 5 p.m. lecture.

Tuesday's activities will feature keynote speaker Attallah Shabazz.

Shabazz, co-founder of Nucleus Inc. production company, will speak at 8 p.m. in 106 Carroll Hall.

Doshi said she thought Shabazz would speak on some of the current campus issues such as the black cultural center movement. "We thought that it was pertinent that students hear her message," she said.

A discussion of similarities and differences between black and white fraternities and sororities, sponsored by the Black Greek Council, the Inter-Fraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council, also will be held Tuesday in the Student Union at 3:30 p.m.

The International Relief Committee will sponsor a Yard Sale for Bosnia at 11 a.m. in the Pit. Tuesday's activities will also include a lecture about the roles of black women in the family and will be sponsored by Sigma Gamma Rho sorority.

Wednesday, which SARR designated UNC Housekeepers Appreciation Day, will include a candlelight vigil in the Pit at 7:15 p.m. and a

Chapel Hill, Ann Arbor mayors make NCAA bet

By Jackie Hershkovitz
City Editor

Chapel Hill Mayor Ken Broun has a personal stake in tonight's NCAA championship game between North Carolina and Michigan.

If UNC loses, Broun will have to wear a Michigan victory T-shirt to the next Chapel Hill Town Council meeting — a thought the Tar Heel fan doesn't particularly relish.

Broun bet Ann Arbor Mayor Liz

Brater that the mayor of the winning town would send the mayor of the losing town a victory T-shirt to be worn at an official town function.

"I'm not worried," Broun said. "We have a better team and a better coach. I don't expect to have to wear a Michigan shirt."

Brater said she was equally confident she would not have to face the ridicule of her colleagues.

"My nine-year old son is my sports adviser and he says we're expected to win," Brater said.

Brater called Broun Sunday night to propose the wager. Broun said he immediately agreed.

"When you weigh this against issues like taxation and transportation, it's one of the more important matters mayors have to deal with," Broun said.

Brater said that if UNC wins, she would hang her head in shame and bear the inevitable disgrace.

Broun said that if the unthinkable happened, he would explain his plight to town council members in hopes of obtaining forgiveness.

"I think they'll sympathize," he said. "I hope I won't be accused of being a secret Michigan fan. Although, there are a lot of Dookies on the council who will probably think it's funny."

DA drops Burnette charges

Staff report

Charges against former UNC quarterback Chuckie Burnette, levied after stolen furniture was found in his residence hall room, were dropped Thursday by the Orange County district attorney's office.

While making a routine maintenance check during Winter Break, University housing personnel found a coffee table, an end table and two chairs in the Teague Residence Hall room occupied by Burnette and Julius Reese, a UNC football wide receiver.

The furniture found in Burnette and Reese's room had been reported stolen from a Carmichael Residence Hall lounge last August at the end of a football team stay in the dormitory.

Police issued a warrant, searched the room and found two University property tags at the bottom of a footlocker owned by Burnette.

Burnette and Reese were charged with possession of stolen property Jan. 13.

Burnette and Reese made an agreement with police in February in which they agreed to pay a $60 fine and perform 40 hours of community service rather than go on trial.

The charges against Burnette were dropped Thursday when police verified that the former UNC quarterback had performed his community service, said Jim Woodall, assistant Orange County district attorney.

The charges against Reese will be dropped as soon as the district attorney receives written confirmation that Reese has finished his community service, Woodall said.

"He's done it," Woodall said. "We just need written confirmation."

Burnette told police that he and Reese bought the furniture, and did not know that it had been stolen.
